building for Christian uses.

Dignitaries from five continents and from islands of the sea, representatives of the Anglican communion throughout the world, participated in the triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church in the United States in Boston last week. For the first time in ecclesiastical history the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of All England and Metropolitan, was present.

The captain of the British steamship "Sibun" reports that when the ship passed the Island of Martinique, Ninth month 30th, Mont Pelee was in full eruption. The spectacle was witnessed by those on board the "Sibun" at two o'clock in the morning of the day mentioned, the volcano emitting stupendous black clouds and balls of fire. This accounts for the dust-clouds reported to have been seen last week throughout the Windward Islands.

Less than thirty years ago Stanley (1875) gave King Mtesa, of Uganda, his first lesson in Christian doctrine.
At that time there was not a Christian in all Central Africa. This year the London Times, in the regular course of its news, publishes an account of the consecration of the great Christian Cathedral, built by the Uganda Church, at Mengo, which was formerly King
Mtesa's capital. Ten thousand native Christian Ugandans attended the consecration services.

A peace congress of the Central American republics has been held and a treaty signed binding them to submit disputes to arbitration and to prevent one republic from being invaded by its enemies from another. It is to be hoped that the plans adopted will discourage insurrections and bring the republics concerned into permanently friendly relations. These republics are setting a good example to more pretensions nations by agreeing to submit their contentions to arbitration.

With the exception of employees of the rod mills, all tonnage men at the United States Steel Corporation plant, Joliet, Ill., are now at work under a new schedule of wages, which represents a reduction of from 20 to 40 per cent. According to statements given out this is part of a plan affecting all plants. Tenth month 1st, the notices having just reached Joliet, South Chicago and other points from headquarters. The new schedule has aroused considerable discussion in mill circles, but there are no evidences of trouble among the men.

It is disappointing to note in the European dispatches so many intimations that another international peace or arbitration conference at The Hague will be impracticable for some time.
The reports are to the effect that Russia will not participate in such a conference while the war lasts, if for no other reason than that the interests of neutrals are opposed to those of a belligerent, and, consequently, while hostilities continue in the Far East, Russia could not risk her rights in a congress in which neutrals would have the great majority of the delegates.

Secretary of State John Hay, representing the United States of America, spoke the word of welcome to the delegates of the International Peace Congress, who met in Boston last week.
He pointed out that this country's greatest men had been warm advocates of peace. He agreed with Tolstoi that religion is the remedy for war. He promised the Administration's support, so far as practicable, for the principle of arbitration, and expressed confidence that at no distant day the attention of the nations might be brought to a project looking toward the return of peace in the Far East.

The largest wireless telegraph station in the world is now being installed at Pisa, Italy, and will be ready to transmit messages early next year.
Marconi is planning to have the batteries strong enough to send messages to England, this country and to vessels on the Atlantic, Mediterranean, Baltic and Red Seas. In addition to this activity in telegraphic communications in Italy, a group of Dutch capitalists have formed a company to operate a new cable line on the other side of the world. The cables of this new organization will connect the island of Celebes in the Dutch East Indies with the classically named island of Yap, and from there the cables will go to Guam and Shanghai. The working capital of the new company is $1,666,- 000, and the estimated cost of laying the cables is $3,451,000.

The International Congress of Tuberculosis met in St. Louis last week.
The speakers made suggestions for legislation compelling State and national governments to closely inspect not only public buildings and vehicles, but also tenement districts and schools. It was also advanced that beneficial results would be attained by the segregation of the tubercular insane in asylums and hospitals. Resolutions were adopted as follows: "That it is the imperative duty of all civilized governments to take immediate action for the arrest of the spread of tuberculosis; that every government should appoint a commissioner of the public health with a seat in the Cabinet, endowed with sufficient means properly to fight the scourge; that it is the duty of health boards to report cases; that to facilitate the early diagnosis of the disease it is the duty of every municipality to provide laboratory facilities for the examination of sputa, and that systematic efforts be made for the education of the public in relation to the curability of tuberculosis, through the circulation of pamphlets, the holding of health conventions and the organization of local and State societies for the suppression of the disease.

Bryn Mawr College began its twentieth year the 4th inst. President M.
Carey Thomas delivered an address of welcome to more than 400 students. She cautioned her hearers concerning their deportment, and told them never to forget that they are a part of an academic community, which profits or loses by the action of every student. In part she said: "In a few years, one-third of all college-bred people in the United States will be women. All civilized women are turning toward America to learn what we are going to do with our opportunities. Already we are regarded by other women as the happiest and the freest of all women. . . . It is one of the glories of human development that education goes on through a prolonged childhood. Recent investigations have proved that the guinea pig is born with an almost complete guinea-pig brain, and with most of its little faculties perfect. It reaches the summit of its tiny intellectual development in three days. The much more intellectually brilliant rat is born with an incomplete brain, and with no power of caring for itself. It attains its full capacity of finding its way through labyrinths, opening doors of traps and getting food in all sorts of ingenious rat ways only at twenty-three days of age. After that it may make new combinations of old contrivances; but its powers have reached their maximum, and it can never acquire any new and more difficult tricks. Like the brain of the guinea pig and the rat, our human brains cease to grow at about the age of thirty, and after the age of fifty-five begin to shrink and grow less. Our power of changing and improving ourselves is lessened with each year of age, and after we have reached our maximum development we are during our lives what our intellectual habits have made us. . . ."

A passage from the address of Justice David J. Brewer, given before the International Congress of Lawyers and Jurists at St. Louis recently, received prolonged applause and is of more than usual significance. It reads: "The purchase which this great exposition commemorates was not the result of conquest and came not at the end of war. Not a gun was fired or a life lost. A lawyer, not a soldier, made the transfer. The glory of that transfer is one of the laurels of our profession."

It was announced at a meeting of the Manchester (Eng.) city council last week that owing to the hard times and depression in the cotton industries, between 40,000 and 50,000 people in the poorer parts of the city were practically on the verge of starvation. Similar conditions prevail in London and other large cities of the United Kingdom, where the winter is expected to be one of the hardest in many years for the poorer classes.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

EV'N IN THE GRAVE.

*I laid my inventory at the hand
Of Death, who in his gloomy arbor sate;
And while he conned it, sweet and desolate
I heard love singing in that quiet land.
He read the record even to the end—
The heedless, livelong injuries of Fate,
The burden of fear, the burden of love and hate,
The wounds of foe, the bitter wounds of friend:
All, all he read, ay, ev'n the indifference,
The vain talk, vainer silence, hope, and dream:
He questioned me: "What seek'st thou then instead?"
I bowed my face in the pale evening gleam:
Then gazed he on me with strange innocence,
"Ev'n in the grave thou'lt have thyself," he said.*

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

BY WILLIAM C. STOKES.

Mine eyes have seen the coming of the blessed Prince of Peace,
When He shall reign in triumph, and all war and strife shall cease;
I hear the royal message of "Good-will, and peace to men,"
The blessed, blessed tidings ringing over earth again.

There'll be no deadly conflict, neither cannon's awful roar,
When Christ leads forth His armies, going ever on before;
His weapons are not carnal, made by any skill of man,
But, mighty through His Spirit, they shall carry out His plan.

We're marching in the army of our Saviour and our Lord,
The word of life He gives us for our ever conquering sword;
Against the host of evil shall the warfare never cease,
Till He shall reign in triumph as the blessed Prince of Peace.

Mine ears have heard the chorus of the host around the throne,
A joyful band and fairer than the earth has ever known;
They're shouting hallelujah, and unitedly they sing,
In glad and ceaseless praises to their everlasting King.

Copyright, 1904, by Charles H. Gabriel.

NOW AND HERE.

IT HAS been only too easy in all epochs and generations to give up the hope of spiritual victory here and now. Victories get postponed to a world where conditions are easier. "Beyond"—"yonder" are the words which fill our imagination. Here things seem stubborn and almost hopeless, and millions have stoutly believed that this is Satan's world. Again and again the Church has rested satisfied when it held out the promise of peace in a life beyond, freedom and joy when the fleshly coil no longer bound in the soul, and a holy life only after the tug of temptation was over—"where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

Quakerism is a protest against this theory of life. It is not a religion of hats and coats. It is not an ism founded on thee and thou. It is not a society to practice silence. It is not a "form" of Christianity whose aim is to destroy all "forms." To leave negatives, it is an attempt to exhibit spiritual victory in the actual world. The main business of the early Friends was to show that everything which the Church had promised for the "beyond" could also be realized "here" and "now." "I was come up into the Paradise of God," says the valiant Fox.

A dozen conversations of his with those who "pleaded for sin" as a necessity of the present life show how completely he denied such a view. Bunyan's Christian, who is forever falling into sloughs and dungeons, who loses his roll and gets on only by fits and starts, is the typical Christian of the old theory. He is the character that we all know very well. Too often he appears in our own clothes and sleeps in our bed! But that is no type for the true Quaker. Christ came to set men free and to make them holy—not in theory, but in fact. He came not to guarantee a haven of rest somewhere else, but to make sons of God out of poor sinners like us and to enable us to do His will on earth as it is done in heaven. Peace and joy "yonder," He does promise, but only as the consummation of a present peace and joy. Victory in the heavenly heights may surpass anything which earth can show. But daily, hourly, we may live in a faith which is already victory and the promise of the white stone, the throne, the new name and the morning star is to those who have overcome. The way to heaven is through heaven. The hope of glory is a present Christ within. The proof of joy beyond the pains and suffering is a joy in the midst of the sufferings and the pains, the evidence of peace beyond the storms is peace now while the storm is raging. God is good. This world is His world. He makes saints here. He keeps His little ones from falling and holds them up lest they dash too hard against the stones. He makes a radiance on the faces even of those who tread winepresses and He is teaching through His faithful ones that the business of life is not to stretch out lame hands for distant crowns, but to co-operate with Him in making this world the kingdom of God.

LOVE VERSUS JUSTICE.

THERE is still a third error which has left its serious mark on doctrines of the atonement, and which must be removed before it is possible to think correctly of the Divine work toward the redemption of man. This is the tendency to pit "love" and "justice" against each other, as though they were independent attributes or qualities of the Divine Nature.

This same error used to be made in treating of man's mental faculties. Man's inner life was divided up into a lot of independent faculties, such as memory, imagination, thought, emotion, will, etc. Each little compartment of the mind took charge of one special faculty. It was even supposed that the "bumps" on the head showed where the faculties were located and so a man's character could be read in his "bumps." This view is wholly false. All the powers of the inner life contribute to any mental operation whatever. It is impossible to remember without using imagination and thought and will and emotion. It is impossible to perform an act of will without all these other mental powers. Wherever there is any mental operation it means a whole person acting in a special way. The entire self goes into all acts and deeds which have meaning and purpose in them. Anger is a person angry; love is a person loving; justice is a person dealing righteously. These qualities of "love" or "justice" are no more independent things which could come into conflict with each other than the two ends of a stick are independent things, or the smile on a face is independent of the face.

This erroneous view is nowhere taught in Scripture. On the contrary, the true view is taught. Love is not a quality which God has and which may now and then be displaced by another quality—justice for instance. God is love. God's life is a living unity—not a patchwork of warring qualities. His entire being is manifested in every spiritual activity, whether it be love or justice or forgiveness or punishment.

There is no gap, no contest between opposing qualities of His nature. There is no contradiction between the two profound sayings: "God is a consuming fire" and "God is love." Instead of being opposed, they truly belong together. True love is never a thin, weak thing without its stern and righteous aspect. The father does not "lay aside" his love when he punishes his child and exhibits righteousness to him. Nor does he lay aside justice when he loves. Not at all. It is the father's intense love which wields the rod. He cannot bear to see one he loves go on unwarned and uncorrected. All true chastisement flows out of love. Love and justice are born in the same heart. They live together and neither ever appears without the other.

The human child deals not with some abstract quality in God. He does not look up and find himself met now by "justice," now by "love." He looks up and finds God, a Being of love and righteousness, a Being who is righteous because He loves, and who loves because He is righteous. Mercy and truth, righteousness and peace meet together and kiss each other, i. e., they are in living unity in the heart of God.

THE INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONGRESS.

Once already, in the abolition of slavery, the joy has been given to the Society of Friends of having one of its great ideals of human brotherhood realized, and in the Thirteenth International Peace Congress, held in Boston, Tenth month 3-8, it has seemed as if our peace ideals might also come to reality. Over a thousand delegates from all kinds of organizations met there, and the meetings were attended by thousands of visitors which it sometimes required three simultaneous meetings to accommodate. It was the largest and most successful Congress ever held. There were probably 150 Friends in attendance. Of these, six were from England, and J. G. Alexander, Benjamin Trueblood, Albert K. Smiley, Hannah J. Bailey and Joshua L. Baily served in conspicuous places in the work of the Congress.

The Interparliamentary Peace Union had been the guests of the United States government at St. Louis this year, and this brought many distinguished foreign officials to this country and to the Boston Congress and made it truly international and broad in its sympathies and interests. There were in all 150 foreign delegates. It was a source of just pride to the American members that our Secretary of State, John Hay, should have so fittingly welcomed this Congress to the United States, and this, with the recent cordial words of President Roosevelt, promising to call a second Hague Convention, made a profound impression on the Congress.

During the six days of the Congress peace was discussed from many points of view. Christians and Confucianists, Jews and Hindoos, Socialists and capitalists, Russians and Japanese met on the ground of human brotherhood and love to condemn war as inhuman and economically wrong. We were reminded that the cost of an ordinary battleship would pay for the buildings and grounds of Harvard University and of Hampton and Tuskegee Institutes combined, and that this could be turned into old junk by pressing an electric button, as was done in Havana harbor; and that, while sailors were drowned for want of money to build lighthouses and life-saving apparatus, while humanity suffered in slums and while tuberculosis patients died for want of proper care, we had no right to use the public funds in such a way.

The Baroness von Suttner, author of "Lay Down Your Arms," kept always before the Congress the dramatic horrors of war and the sufferings to men and horses, and economists from all nations dwelt on the terrible waste of energy and power which war involved.

There was an interesting group of Socialists, with representatives from several nations. They showed that the true purpose of government was not as police to see a fair struggle between opposing interests, but a co-operative commonwealth that should give every advantage to all that each individual and each nation may fulfil its own work in the service of mankind. We have now a growing sense of unity and interdependence between all peoples, and soon men must refuse to fight because they feel so keen a sense of kinship with all.

Charles Wagner, the author of "The Simple Life," was a conspicuous member of the literary group. He struck a deep spiritual note in telling us that war lay not in forts or cannon or battleships, but in the heart of man. When we shall feel toward men not "What can I get out of them?" but "What can I do for them?" we shall have peace indeed. In the darkness we may fear that men are enemies, but in the light of Christian brotherhood we see that they are friends.

The consideration of our relations to weaker peoples produced exciting discussions of conditions on the Congo and in Armenia and other places. With our present use of armed force we saw how easily aboriginal peoples feel themselves despised and lose heart, and that though it is easier to kill them than develop them, even they might be able to make a contribution to the advancement of the world. That to work them for our own benefit is child labor on a large scale, but to educate them is our glorious opportunity.

Mass meetings were held for Christian Endeavorers, women, workingmen, business men and educators and on special subjects connected with the movement. Each morning there was a devotional meeting in which Protestants, Roman Catholics, Unitarians and Jews met for worship on a common platform. A large number of supplemental peace meetings will be held during the next week in Eastern cities, at which delegates to the conference will speak and many foreign delegates will go to New York and Philadelphia for this purpose. The Congress will meet next year in Lucerne, Switzerland.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE LORD'S SHUT-INS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Just why the loving Master confines some of His choicest and best in rooms of suffering, and cripples others of them in body or in purse, we cannot always tell. One thing is very clear, and that is that He does not mean to cripple their usefulness. To speak for Christ or to work for Christ is often easy and pleasant; but to bear for Christ either pain, or poverty, or confinement with courageous patience is more eloquent than many a pulpit discourse. No portion of Paul's wonderful career was productive of more solid results than the years of his imprisonment at Rome. He styled himself an "ambassador in chains," and he preached the kingdom of God to those about him until there were many converts in "Cæsar's household." He wrote seven of his thirteen undisputed epistles while he was the prison chaplain under the eyes of Nero's jailers—one of these was the letter to Philippi, which is the epistle of gratitude for divine mercies and of exultant joy under sharp afflictions.

If the cages of birds are sometimes covered up in order to make them sing, the old hero was caged to furnish to the world one of its most melodious epics of sublime faith in Jesus. Satan afterwards clapped John Bunyan into a prison, and lo, out of the windows of the Bedford jail floated the transcendent allegory of the "Pilgrim's Progress."

The service of Jesus Christ is not limited by any stress of circumstances. A sick chamber has often been made a chosen spot for glorifying God. The celebrated Halyburton of Scotland welcomed scores of visitors to that room in St. Andrew's where they stood around his bedside and listened to words that seemed to be inspired by a glimpse of heaven from the land of Beulah. None of his previous sermons equalled his discouragements from that bed of suffering. "This is the best pulpit," said he, "that I was ever in. I am laid on this bed for this very end, that I may commend my Lord." He called it a shaking hands with the King of Terrors. After a night of agonizing pain, he said to his wife, "Jesus came to me in the third watch of the night, walking upon the waters; and He said to me, I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, and I have the keys of death. He stilled the tempest in my soul, and there is a sweet calm. I have ripened fast under the bright sun of righteousness, and have had brave showers. Now I am thinking of the pleasant spot of earth that I will soon get to lie on; I will get my little Georgie in my hand, and we will be a group of bonnie dust." After his voice failed him in the last moments, he continued to clap his hands in triumph.

It is not only by such joyful testimonies to sustaining power of divine grace, or by cheerful patience, that the prisoners of Jesus Christ have preached and are preaching His precious gospel. There are many ways of doing good open to invalids. During the years that the wife of Charles H. Spurgeon was confined to her room, she conceived the plan of providing commentaries and useful books for poor ministers and village preachers. She told me that over one hundred thousand such volumes had been secured in response to her appeals. When I visited her in the beautiful old home at "Westwood," I found that she was cheering the lonely hours of her widowhood by continuing this labor of love. Some of Charlotte Elliott's sweetest hymns, in England, and some of the best productions in our own land, have been written during periods of confinement in the chamber of an invalid. A large-hearted lady shut in from her former activities out-of-doors, spends much of her time in folding and addressing little leaflets of awakening or of consoling truth to those who may be profited by them. In many a house there is a room whose silent influence is felt all over the dwelling.

The other members of the family come in there to inquire after the sick sufferer, to bring some choice fruit or pleasant gift, to read aloud, or watch with her through the lonesome night. From that room steals forth an influence that makes every one gentler and tenderer and more unselfish. Perhaps this may be one of the reasons why God permits some of his children to suffer; they not only grow purer by the chastening, but become evangelists of blessing to others. Paul in his prison prompted many besides Onesiphorus to deeds of sympathy for him, and he evoked such gifts of kindness from his spiritual children at Philippi that he writes to them that their love "hath blossomed out afresh." That is the literal rendering of the message sent by the old, sunny-souled prisoner of Jesus Christ. The Master takes great delight in many of His shut-ins. They are weaving bright coronals for themselves to be worn in that land in which none shall say, "I am sick," and neither shall there be any more pain. Good friends, it matters little where we are so long as our inner life is hid with Christ, and we keep luminous with the joy of His presence.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS LOVE."

BY F. W. ROBERTSON.

Love is its own perennial fount of strength. The strength of affection is a proof, not of the worthiness of the object, but of the largeness of the soul which loves. Love descends, not ascends. The might of a river depends not on the quality of the soil through which it passes, but on the inexhaustibleness and depth of the spring from which it proceeds. The greater mind cleaves to the smaller with more force than the other to it. A parent loves the child more than the child the parent, and partly because the parent's heart is larger, not because the child is worthier. The Saviour loved His disciples infinitely more than His disciples loved Him, because His heart was infinitely larger. Love trusts on—ever hopes and expects better things; and this a trust springing from itself, and out of its own deeps alone.

It is this trusting love that makes men what they are trusted to be, so realizing itself. Would you make men trustworthy? Trust them. Would you make them true? Believe them. . . .

It is on this principle that Christ wins the hearts of His redeemed. He trusted the doubting Thomas, and Thomas arose with a faith worthy "of his Lord and his God." He would not suffer even the lie of Peter to shake His conviction that Peter might love Him yet; and Peter answered to that sublime forgiveness. . . .

Therefore, come what may, hold fast to love. Though men should rend your heart, let them not embitter or harden it. We win by tenderness; we conquer by forgiveness. O, strive to enter into something of that large, celestial charity which is meek, enduring, unretaliating and which even the overbearing world can not withstand forever! Learn the new commandment of the Son of God—not to love, but to love as He loved. Go forth in this spirit to your life-duties; go forth, children of the Cross, to carry everything before you, and win victories for God by the conquering power of a love like His.

Some Views on Present Day Topics.

MEETNESS FOR HEAVEN.

BY MARY D'C. M'CLELLAN.

There is an idea current almost everywhere that the Christian is being gradually made fit for heaven, as grapes ripen in the sun. This ripening process, or this meetness, begins, it is thought, with conversion, goes on under the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit, and when perfected, the believer is ready for glory, whenever it may please the Lord to call him away.

In Colossians 1: 12-14, St. Paul gives us four things to be thankful for: " 'Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet' to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light: 'who hath delivered us' from the power of darkness, 'and hath translated us' into the kingdom of His dear Son: in 'whom we have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins.' "

This Scripture does not tell us that God is making us meet, but that He has already done so. Do not the words declare an absolutely accomplished fact? "Who hath made us meet." The clause points distinctly back to a definite past act, by which the Father, at some definite point of time, made us meet.

What lends support to the thought of meetness for heaven being a thing of gradual growth, is the fact that those who think so find so much evil within. We should never confound the work of the Holy Spirit within the believer with that mighty work of redemption which the Word ascribes to the precious blood of Christ. The work of the Holy Spirit in us cannot be spoken of as finished; whereas the atoning work of Christ is finished, and nothing remains to be done.

Leviticus 17: 11: "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul."

Ephesians 1: 7: "In whom [the Beloved] we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."

In these two verses we have a cover for the sin, and forgiveness for the sinner.

Romans 5: 9: "Being now justified by His blood."

Ephesians 2: 13: "But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ."

Hebrews 10: 19: "Having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus."

The feeblest believer in the Lord Jesus Christ is sheltered by that blood, like Israel in Egypt, on the night of the Passover.

The plain, emphatic teaching of the New Testament is that faith in Christ works a change so great, puts so under cover of the blood, that we get a new birth, a new nature, a new relationship; that we are sealed with the indwelling Spirit of God, and that we are made meet for the inheritance.

All this meetness is the result of redemption, and this is by the precious blood of Christ, the full worth of which is credited by God to every believer in Jesus. Thank God, we are "meet for the inheritance," we are meet for heaven, if we have ever so humbly trusted ourselves to Jesus Christ and received of Him everlasting life.

There is no growth in meetness for heaven. Growth in other ways there is; indeed, the Bible is full of suggested lines of thought about Christian growth and progress. A child grows in stature, in intelligence, but—the relationship into which he was born does not grow with his growth. So with the believer: he does grow—2 Peter 3: 18, "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ;" 2 Corinthians 3: 18, "We all, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord."

But the believer does not grow in meetness for glory, in meetness for heaven. If the penitent thief could have come down from the cross, and spent long years in service for Christ, would he at the end have been more fit for glory, than at the moment when Jesus said to him, "To-day shalt thou be with Me?"

If you and I are before God in the full value of Christ's finished work, and in all the acceptableness of Christ Himself, can anything, can any love, can any service on our part, contribute aught to what is already perfect and complete? What we are in ourselves is one thing, and what we are as viewed "in Christ Jesus" is quite another thing.

Let us come to a definite decision about our own case. Is our place in God's presence that of a sinner forgiven, justified, accepted for the sake of Christ, and by virtue of His finished work on the cross? Have we taken that place in God's presence as the only place of safety, thus acknowledging ourselves as guilty, and our absolute need of His work on the cross?

Have we taken that place on the testimony of God about His Son, "that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried and that He rose again, according to the Scriptures?" That "He bore our sins in His own body on the tree;" that "He made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin;" that "we might be made the righteousness of God in Him?"

Is it a fact that we have not only heard the word of Jesus, but have believed on Him that sent Him: that we have believed what God says about the Lord Jesus Christ in relation to us?

Is it a fact that we, that you, that I, can look up into His face and say: "Lord, I accept as true all that Thou hast said in Thy Word about me; and, Lord, I accept as true all that Thou hast said about Jesus, the Son of Thy love?"

Is it a fact that we believe the testimony of God as to what Christ has done for us, and the place He has given us in Him? Is it a fact that we accept all this as true, just as we would if we saw it with our own eyes, or were actually in the body in heaven? That we look upon ourselves as being what God tells us we are in His sight, and not as to what we are in our own sight, in our present imperfect condition down here?

What a portion is the believer's! All trespasses forgiven, cleansed in the blood of Christ, justified from all things, complete in Christ; sharing the life, the nearness, the acceptance, the love of Christ, in whom the believer is found; sealed and indwelt by the Holy Spirit, and already made meet for heaven. All this is the gift of grace, and is true of every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. As His blood was shed, sin was put away for all eternity, the veil was rent, and the way for the feeblest believer in Jesus to draw very near to God was open forever; and the blood-sprinkled sinner is now made meet to stand before the blood-sprinkled throne!

"Wonderful! glorious! past comprehension!

I, so unworthy, once ruined and lost,
And now, one with Christ through His grace and His mercy,
Purchased by blood, at an infinite cost.
In the Beloved accepted, forgiven,
God, looking at me, sees only His Son:
That blessed One who, for me, has been smitten,
And not what I, a poor sinner, have done.

"I have been crucified with my Redeemer,
So I am dead to the law and to sin;
We have been quickened together, forever,
So I am bearing the new life within.
Risen with Christ, yea, and sitting together
With my Beloved in places above;
So doth the Father behold me forever—
Oh! how amazing, what wonderful love!"

THE ATONEMENT.

FORENSIC, INTRINSIC AND ETHICAL.

BY S. A. WOOD.

The Scriptures nowhere even imply that Christ, by an atonement, changed God. Everywhere the idea is that man is the one changed. To get a clear Biblical understanding of the atonement, we must understand its relation to man and what changes are wrought and how they are brought about.

It is true, whether we think of God as a Sovereign or as a Father, that His attitude toward rebellious and guilty man is twofold. For while He loves and would save, He must, in justice, recompense every disobedience if He would maintain government; therefore His wrath abides upon the unreconciled. The wrath of God is not to be dispelled by a change in God, but by man's reconciliation to God. While it stands true that every transgression and disobedience shall receive a just recompense of reward, no guilty man can be reconciled to God without the redemption of his transgressions. The penalty of the broken law must be paid. Inasmuch as the penalty is death, a death must take place for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant. Christ's vicarious death did this. When the penalty of a broken law is paid, then the transgression is redeemed, the transgressor justified, and God's attitude is changed from wrath to favor, not by any change in God, but by a change in man's legal standing before God.

Man's alienation from God is not alone forensic, but intrinsic as well; therefore a merely forensic atonement is not sufficient for his complete reconciliation. Death has actually passed unto all men, so that they are dead; not alive unto God, but unto sin. A complete reversal of this state must be wrought, that a complete reconciliation may be had; man must be dead to sin and alive unto God. The death of Christ, to be a complete atonement, must be a death to sin. It is written, "The death that He died, He died unto sin once." By His being made to be sin on our behalf this was possible, and it follows that "the life that He liveth, He liveth unto God."

The death of Christ, being "an offering for sin, condemned sin in the flesh," working an intrinsic change, so that in Christ Jesus we are dead to sin and alive unto God, not by imputation, nor by impartation, but by actual possession of the Son in whom alone is the life which is the gift of God.

The atonement is the one forensic act of righteousness by which Christ justifies the ungodly, and the intrinsic act of righteousness by which they that receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness, reign in life by one Jesus Christ, and the ethical powers by which Christ draws men unto himself. It is the forensic and intrinsic righteousness of the atonement that gives it its ethical force. Without these it would be an expressionless thing not even revealing the love of God to man. When Jesus said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself," He knew that in being lifted up He would become a curse and redeem man from the curse of the law, and that He would redeem him from the power and dominion of sin, a forensic and intrinsic benefit to man that would be the mightiest ethical power in the world.

ELISHA AT DOTHAN.

2 Kings 6: 8-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.—Psa. 34: 7.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 24.—Elisha and Naaman. 2 Kings 5: 1-9.

First-day, Tenth mo. 30.—Source of cleansing. 1 John 1.

Time.—Unknown, but probably during the latter part of the reign of Jehoram, king of Israel, 847-844 B. C.

Place.—Samaria; Dothan, about twelve miles north of city of Samaria; and Damascus.

Rulers.—Jehoram, king of Israel; Joram, king of Judah; Benhadad II, of Damascus; Shalmaneser II, of Assyria.

Elisha is one of the most interesting characters in Hebrew history, but as his life was a quieter one than Elijah's he does not stand out with the same vividness. Elijah answered more fully the popular conception of a prophet and so has become a type of an ideal prophet. Elijah was a man to reverence, to admire, to fear; Elisha was a man to love, to live with, to go to for sympathy. The history of Elisha, as given in 2 Kings, appears to be a summary in which the chronological order is not observed, and so relative, and contemporary incidents cannot be given with accuracy. It is so with the present lesson.

8. "Now the king of Syria." R. V. Benhadad II, whose capital was Damascus. The war seems to have consisted of a series of raids.

9. "The man of God." Elisha; a common way of speaking of a prophet. "King of Israel." "Jehoram." As between the king of Syria and the king of Israel, Elisha would aid Israel. His history depicts him as a patriotic man. "Beware . . . the Syrians are coming down," R. V. The Syrians were lying in wait or preparing to lie in wait for the Israelites, and the prophet sent to the king to warn him either not to go or to be on his guard against an ambush.

10. "Sent to the place." Probably one or two men to act as scouts. And this was done several times.

11. The king of Syria after several failures naturally suspected treachery among his followers. Such a thing was perhaps more common then than now.

12. "Elisha the prophet." This mention of him would indicate that Elisha had a reputation extending beyond Israel. There must have been frequent communication between Damascus and Israel. There is nothing to show that the incident of the lesson took place after the cure of Naaman. "The words that thou speakest in thy bed chamber." Possibly a proverbial expression to express complete knowledge.

13. "Go and see where he is," R. V. The king does not seem to take into account the possibility that Elisha might be aware of this intention also. "Send and fetch him." The king wished to capture him and so prevent his doing harm to Syria. "Dothan." This town on the high road from Damascus to Syria is mentioned only in this place and in Genesis 37: 17. The fact that the Syrians were able to go so far into Israel is a comment on the power of Syria, and the character of the defence of Israel.

14. "A great host." Of course this is a comparative statement; the "host" was great in comparison with the raiding or marauding bands. "By night." It is still a characteristic of oriental warfare that such attacks should be made at night. "Compassed." Guarded the gates so that none could come out.

15. "Servant." The original indicates a special attendant. It is hardly likely that this was Gehazi; it surely was not if the present incident took place after that of Naaman. The fear and doubt of the man were most natural.

16. The prophet could speak both from faith and personal experience.

17. To Elisha faith in the Lord's protection was enough; his servant needed sight to confirm him, and it was granted to him. It is not needful to suppose that he saw literal horses and chariots of fire; they may have seemed so to him. The important thing was that he should be conscious of protection, and realize that the power of the Lord though unseen to outward eyes was round about His servants. The stars are just as surely in the heavens in the daytime as in the night.

18. "Blindness." Rather "with illusion" or "with a mist," so they could not recognize him.

19-23. This story is a curious one and must be taken as a whole. Elisha's purpose was to teach the Syrians a lesson so that they might know something of the power of Jehovah to protect His followers; the kindness with which they were treated touched their hearts and the result was peace to Israel.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 29.—Loving and giving. 1 John 3: 17-20.

As in all the graces of that life "which is life indeed," the measure and pattern for our giving is Christ. His riches were real, but the opportunities that opened before Him of winning human love made them seem light in the balance, and He gave Himself in the adventure. He who could have won wealth of material things as none other ever could, knew the greater value of spiritual possessions, and it was to the enlargement of His kingdom of loyal followers that Christ had regard rather than to the pomp of a world empire. He chose giving as the mode of gaining because His wisdom knew it to be the only road to real enlargement.

Before we give we must be led to regard for some other person or purpose than ourselves and our own interests as of importance, and that in itself is an important lesson to learn. Then, having made our investment, our interest and prayers are almost sure to follow it. The miser, whose sole object of life is to gather to himself, furnishes by contrast the demonstration in favor of liberality. The whole trend of his life is toward an attenuation of every noble capacity until the vanishing point is reached, and then—extinction.

Such would seem to be the real self-denial,—this cutting off from one's self of the opportunities of attainment and development that are in the plan of the Creator for His crowning work. People generally consider that when they refuse to gratify certain desires or appetites that they may have something by which they may minister to others they are practicing self-denial; but we must construe our Lord's words as to denying ourselves to follow Him as applying to the less worthy elements of our nature, for surely the outcome of all service such as He proposes is the realization of a far higher and better self.

Isaiah 58: 7-11 pictures the liberal man and his development in spiritual things, just as the selection from Proverbs for our topic emphasizes the favor of God in material blessings. We may not always receive the latter, though it is entirely safe to rely on the word, "They that honor Me I will honor;" but the higher gift is assured.

The giving of one's self first of all (2 Cor. 8: 5) opens up avenues through which will flow, as occasion requires, all that one has for the service of the Master.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FROM JAPAN.

Christian Endeavor in Japan is keeping pace with other lines of Christian work. There are local unions, annual conventions, a monthly magazine (part in English and part in Japanese) and a Japanese traveling secretary, who gives all of his time to the work.

Dr. J. H. Pettee, an old friend of Dr. Clark, is the leading spirit in all Christian Endeavor enterprises.

An informal conference of missionaries interested in Christian Endeavor work was held in Karnizawa on Eighth month 29th. Plans for advancing the work were considered.

As the Japan National Christian Endeavor Union is not yet self-supporting, individuals or Christian Endeavor societies in the United States are invited to become sustaining members of the Japan Union. By the payment of one yen (50 cents) per year, any society or individual becomes a sustaining member of the Union and receives the monthly Christian Endeavor magazine for one year.

Any Friends' Endeavor Society sending the 50 cents would aid a good cause, and do a beautiful thing for interdenominational and international fellowship. Send by international post-office order to Dr. J. H. Pettee, Okayama, Japan.

In Yokohama (the most foreignized city in Japan) there is a Christian Endeavor Society in the Union Church for foreigners. A member lately reported the prayer meetings very spiritual. Business young men who a year ago were opposed to missions and missionary work prayed most earnestly for world-wide evangelization.

In Sendai, in the northern part of Japan, there is a Christian Endeavor Society organized for postal and telegraph men.

In one of the girls' schools a Christian Endeavor meeting is held once a week, and is attended by all girls, Christians and non-Christians.

While the attention of Japan Endeavorers has been much drawn to work for soldiers for some months, it is interesting to hear Dr. Pettee speaking of the prospects of a work for peace. The maker of the most famous sword of Japan handed down the fixed Samurai principle, that "this sword must never be used except in cases of the most urgent necessity. It must never be used for murder." Dr. Pettee said that this motto Christianized would furnish a good basis for work for peace and arbitration.

At another time notes may be sent concerning Christian Endeavor in the Japan Friends' Mission.

NOTES FROM THE CUBAN MISSIONS.

Some of the Endeavorers of the Friends' Meeting in Gibara, Cuba, have been very faithful in bearing testimony against worldly amusements and intemperance. One, while attending a higher-grade entertainment in the theater, felt that things were being said that a Christian should not listen to, and arose and left the house. Another, on the occasion of her brother's saint's day, prevailed upon him to serve ice-cream instead of beer to his friends who came to congratulate him. Also, when her baby brother was baptized in the Catholic Church, by means of earnest prayer and Christian persuasion, prevailed upon unbelieving parents and friends to serve cake instead of beer—in the face of universal custom and certain ridicule.

Erroneous theology is not the only thing missionaries have to work against. In Gibara, Cuba, the statement has been circulated that the missionaries are paid according to the number of people they can prevail upon to attend meeting, and that Sylvester Jones timed the arrival of a minister from the North so that he reached Gibara during a week of special services which were held in Fourth month. On being informed that the large crowd of people in attendance were all members, the minister immediately raised the salary of the missionaries, so the story went. Children are also frightened into non-attendance at Sabbath school by being told that the missionaries will throw them into the well on the church premises.

A number of intelligent, promising children and young people should be put into the mission school in Gibara at once, in order to prepare them to become the ministers and the day or Sabbath school teachers of the future Friends of Cuba. Friends who desire to make this possible can do so by sending $1.50 per month for this purpose to James Carey, Jr., 119 S. Fremont Street, Baltimore, Md. (treasurer A. F. B. F. M.).

The president of the Christian Endeavor in Holguin, Cuba, went to the United States in Eighth month. A young man who was going on the same ship with her, told her that she ought to take off her Christian Endeavor pin, for some one might burn the ship because of the presence of a Protestant on board, as he had heard that this was the cause of the destruction of the "Slocum." "No," she replied, "I will not do it, for that would be the same as denying my Saviour, and if I deny Him now when I need Him so much, I need not expect Him to help me. No, I will not deny my Lord."

A Cuban member, giving his testimony in the Christian Endeavor meeting at Holguin, was speaking of the narrow way of salvation and said, "When I first entered, for me it was very narrow; but it is growing wider all the time, and I am enjoying it more, and am so encouraged to see my friends entering the same pathway and doing work for the Lord."

N. K. Williams accompanied C. C. Haworth to Auras, twelve miles northeast of Holguin, Cuba, for his regular appointment there on Ninth month 9th. When they arrived they found a merry-go-round in the yard, and as the time for service approached they were running and doing a good business, and the prospects for a service seemed rather poor; but at N. K. Williams' request the owner stopped the merry-go-round for the meeting. About one hundred and twenty-five persons then entered the meeting room and listened with attention to the Word. The Lord was present and gave a good meeting.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Pleasant Plain, Iowa, Orpha Haworth's home society, have agreed to pay the tuition of one pupil in the Holguin school this year.

IN THE AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

"Well, we started Seventh-day morning, after service here. Our safari was very small, besides ourselves only three followers, Shimoli, ten or twelve years old, our one orphan, for interpreter, and two porters. In each load was a folding chair, and I had my sleeping-bag. We each took a good suit of clothes to wear First-day; this to impress the natives with the fact that Christians make a distinction between that day and the others. They have, of course, no idea of reserving one day in the week; indeed, they probably haven't an idea of a week, even though they seem to know months. This was strictly a Quaker safari, not so much as a walking-stick for weapon. We keep porters in front usually, so that they shall not lag.

"Our course was of the usual sort for this country, solely by very narrow and tortuous paths. These paths seem not ever to have been designed, they have just grown, so, of course, they take the ground just as it is, scrubby, stony and steep, more often than smooth. We did not pass through any forest on this safari, although we did cross the Lukosa, over a swinging-vine bridge, rather fascinating. We had to cross several brooks, of course, for this is a well-watered country, fertile, too, a land of plenty, but none were too broad to jump over or to step over on stones, etc.

"The brooks, hereabouts, almost always are at the bottom of a considerable depression, so a tramp anywhere in this region is tediously uppy and downy. We always meet many men and women and children in the paths, frequently bearing loads in circular baskets on their heads, or bunches of bananas or firewood. The baskets are likely to contain beans or sweet potatoes or millet flour. They never carry loads with their hands. The men frequently have spears, shields, bows and arrows, staffs, wooden pitchforks and clubs. While the women are usually empty-handed, save for a jambe sometimes. Jambe is the native agricultural implement, a long-bladed hoe with a very short humpbacked handle.

"It does warm one's heart to find all these savages so cordial and so frank. Sometimes we really are delayed because they come out of their shambas to shake hands with us and grin and grunt. These are mostly men, but the women are almost as forward in verbal greeting. When thou realizes that all but a few natives in Tiriki hadn't ever seen a European, thou must admire these devoted Friends for having made these wild people feel that they were friends. They often greet us, 'Malina,' which is 'friend' in their tongue. How doubly fitting! 'Kavoli' is Kavirondo, but many also say 'Jambo.' Both words are a salutation at meeting and the Kavirondo usually continue the greeting by replying to each other 'Ana' and further by heartfelt grunts. We say 'Ana' and imitate the grunts too, and how it tickles the dear people!

"This is a populous country. The Kavirondo are loosely estimated at a million. We are in North or Upper Kavirondo. There are several or many dialects among them. Our chiefly gang from Gemi hardly understood the Tiriki dialect, and they converse with our station in Swahili. This is extraordinary. In all districts about here the natives hardly live in villages, but are spread over the land in isolated huts, or else slightly associated huts, often shaded by the sightly and valuable banana. One sees these huts everywhere hereabouts.

"But I think we were yet on our Seventh-day safari (journey). We arrived at Kavini's three or four huts, and Kavini himself advanced to welcome us. Being a chief he is supposed to be clothed, or at least his nakedness to be partially concealed, but a filthy blanket was the most we ever saw around him, although we frequently saw a decrepit umbrella over him. Yes, and he did sometimes wear a Zanzibar loin cloth. He managed to order his fez brought out and clapped onto his shaven pate just as we met, that gave him a chiefly style. [The local chiefs in Tiriki got the notion of the distinction of clothing from Friends, who furnished them with blankets or kanzus. But, even so, they are apt only to wear them when desirous to impress their people, or when they visit the station.] Kavini is a favored personage, for the government somehow permits him to sport a superannuated Snider, with a bandolier stuffed with bogus cartridges, and thus he is grander than his fellow chiefs. Nevertheless, Kavini isn't a gooly or a guy either, and he speaks Swahili readily, which is an advantage to him and to us. We entered one of Kavini's huts, where a wife of his was grinding millet between two stones. She was an unsophisticated lady, clad only in anklets and a buxom grin.

"At last we passed on to our own hut, standing alone out of sight of the others, and finely situated, a sweep of sloping sward in front and beyond the dark Nandi escarpment, with vast Mt. Elgon fitfully visible fifty miles away. We arrived at about twelve, having done the ten miles leisurely. We placed our chairs in the hut and rested in them, reading and talking and confabbing with the visiting natives, while Shimoli boiled eggs in a sufuria over a fire he had made outside, at the same time roasting sweet potatoes in the embers, and he heated a kettleful of water too, so that we could make cocoa. The water was all brought up from a brook in one of those round black water-jars so common here. They are a hard compact pottery from Maregoli. Thus we had a hearty and palatable, though simple dinner. Of course we bought the eggs and potatoes from the natives, who brought them to us at once when we arrived. The sweet potatoes are whiter than our white potatoes, but not so sugary as our yellow sweet potatoes. The eggs are small, but good, and we had many good bananas too. All these were bought with a coarse salt, Shimoli proudly and capably doing the bargaining—a dozen eggs for a large handful of salt, perhaps. How eager they are for this salt. It is like confectionery to them. The saltless ones beg to lick the salty hands of the salted.

"After dinner there was more trading and some powwow with Kavini, etc. These natives do delight in powwows. As for the trading, they were buying of us too. Friends keep a few trade goods there, such as blankets, kanzus, soap, salt, etc. A few had money, but mostly they swapped for eggs, bananas, and millet flour. Kavini brought us for a present some wild honey in a vessel of that Maregoli pottery, and what does thou suppose it was shaped like? Believe me, just like the blessed old Boston bean pot, so dear to our kitchens. Edgar Hole was so taken with it he tried to buy it, but Kavini said it belonged to his wife and he didn't dare to sell it. How Edgar Hole and I hawhawed, and Kavini grinned too. So even African chiefs are henpecked, it seems.

"I was busy noticing and talking all that afternoon. Kavini was very gracious and conducted me around his shambas, with his headmen and retainers behind carrying that glorious Snider and his umbrella and stool. I saw the women digging potatoes and groundnuts, almost the only field crops now, and the men burning the stubble and brush, preparing for the next planting. Then Kavini showed me his cattle, too, of sleek aspect enough, but the cows don't have milk to give for long, and never more than a little. The sheep are usually woolless, while the goats, well, they are very goatly goats, but not delightful at all.

"Not long after nightfall, our candle being low, Edgar Hole spread some blankets over his rude bed and I unrolled my sleeping-bag on the ground, and shortly we were sleeping amidst our interesting surroundings. The next morning, before daybreak even, we were awakened by the yelling of a zealous headman of Kavini's, who was announcing our meeting to the countryside, enjoining all who heard him to leave their shambas and attend, and spread the summons. About nine o'clock they began to collect on the slopes before our hut. We already had eaten our breakfast. Then I spent the time before meeting settled down in going in among the people, greeting them, observing them, etc. About eleven Edgar Hole had our two chairs brought out and placed under the projecting roof out of the blazing sunshine, while Kavini and his headmen got the crowd in around us, nearly two hundred and fifty, including children. Their spears, sticks, etc., were all stacked at a distance. The women, only some thirty, bunched by themselves at one side rather more in shade, the bulk of the meeting bareheaded and bare skinned, under the scorching sun. Thus they sat patiently and even attentively for an hour or more. Edgar Hole preached in short sentences, with many halts (in Kiswahili, of course), so that Shimoli could the more effectively interpret into Kavirondo, and faithfully the child did it too.

"After meeting and further handshaking the throng partly dispersed and partly regathered for a grand powwow—native fashion. It was several hours before they all disappeared, and it was a treat to me to be among them. There were vigorous discussions, yet little quarreling. The women, of course, withdrew by themselves, for they seem to be ignored by the men socially, and are of modest conduct anyway.

"After the men at last scattered, Kavini appeared with two native guitars and their players and a few youths to dance. All this to entertain us for our interest and service! The body of the guitar is made of a hollowed block of wood over which a skin is stretched, like a drum, and the strings are of cowhide or the like. They are decently built, but have hardly a musical tone and the natives only drum on them without melody. The dancing was monotonous and foolish, chiefly jerking the chest and throwing the arms. There was a dull chanting too. I wonder the boys didn't become exhausted by such protracted calisthenics.

"When they left us it was nearly supper time. Then sleeping and rising by daylight, breakfast, loading our porters, then making for home. Kavini followed us two miles, for courtesy, with that invariable rifle.

"An interesting expedition and an agreeable one save for the horridly diseased persons. We could only urge them to get over to the station somehow, where the doctor would relieve them. To see adults in pain is distressing enough, but the babies. . . . I discovered that a few of the long, thick staffs carried by natives are hollow, and are made for holding tembo or native beer. There is a neat little contraption at the top to suck it through."

When I found Him in my bosom,
Then I found Him everywhere,
In the bud and in the blossom
In the earth and in the air;
And He spake to me with clearness
From the silent stars that say,
"As ye find Him in His nearness, Ye shall find Him far away."

Walter C. Smith.

I wish you Health enough to make work a pleasure; Wealth enough to supply all necessary needs; Grit enough to battle with difficulty and overcome it; Grace enough to confess your sins and forsake them; and Patience enough to toil until some good is accomplished.

I wish you a Cheerfulness that shall make others glad; a Charity that shall see some good in your neighbor; a Love that shall move you to be useful and helpful; a Faith that shall make real the things of God; and a Hope that shall remove all anxious fear concerning the Future.

I wish you the Dignity which befits the children of God; the Humility which is needed in every follower of Christ; the Prayerfulness which develops and enriches the soul; the Push and Progress which were manifested in the life and labors of our Saviour; and the Piety and Perseverance which come from the abiding presence and influence of the Divine Spirit.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Carrie Nation spoke at Friends' North End Mission, Wichita, Kan., a short time since.

Friends in Wichita are, with other Christian people, becoming stirred up over the saloon problem there. Several mass meetings have been held.

Docia Wooten, well known to many Friends and especially in Indiana and Western Yearly Meeting, has been quite sick at her home in Wichita, Kan.

Richard Haworth entered upon his pastoral duties in Union Street Friends Meeting, Kokomo, Ind., on the 2d inst. The Sabbath services have been well attended.

Wm. Hoyt and Porter Ferguson, of Stella Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, have moved to Imperial, Cal. Wm. Hoyt's wife and children will remain at Stella until Sixth month next.

Leona Longstreth, who served as matron in the Mission Home at Matamoros, Mexico, for some time, was recently united in marriage with Oscar Huddleston, of Pawnee Rock, Kan.

Bayless Fisher will continue his labors in Lick Creek (Western Yearly) Meeting another year. The meeting has been blessed by his labors. He now devotes part of his time to Lost River Meeting.

Honey Creek Quarterly Meeting, held at Iowa Falls, Iowa, from the 30th ult. to the 2d inst., though small, was an occasion of rich blessing to those in attendance. Ellison R. Purdy, of Oskaloosa, was present with helpful services.

Interesting meetings for the foreign delegates to the Boston Peace Congress were held at Bryn Mawr and Haverford Colleges on the 14th, at which addresses were made by prominent delegates. A luncheon was served for the delegates and other guests at the "Deanery," Bryn Mawr.

A report from Fairmount Academy, Ind., states that 102 students have enrolled this year. Three years ago the initial enrollment was 57; this shows a net gain in three years of nearly 100 per cent. Forty-seven of the present students are in regular Bible study courses.

James Welch, of Cherokee, Okla., accompanied by his two daughters, Alice and Alma, and Inez Fellows, of Alva, O. T., have taken up work in the Cleveland Training School. Inez Fellows is an adopted daughter of Henry and Melissa Fellows, well known among Friends.

The Quaker Hill Association, which holds an annual conference at Quaker Hill, N. Y., has obtained possession of the old Quaker Hill Meeting House. It is claimed that the first public protest against human slavery in America came from a meeting held in this house.

James Kerr, of Beloit, Kan., who is touring that State as candidate for Governor on the Prohibition ticket, is well known as a temperance worker in Kansas. His first public work was with the Friends in Jewell County. W. Verlan Culver, of Wichita, Kan., is traveling with him as singer.

Peter W. Raidabaugh, of Plainfield, Ind., addressed the meeting at Muncie, Ind., the 9th inst., on "The Bible and How to Study It." The address was very forceful and inspiring, and aroused a deeper interest in the study of the Book that is doing so much for the nations of the world to-day.

William and Ellen Buell, of Westfield, Ind., are at present visiting different meetings in the limits of Vermillion Quarter, and are engaged in missionary and evangelistic service as the way opens. They attended Vermillion Grove Meeting on the 6th inst. They found the Meeting pervaded by much spirituality on the part of many members.

The Quarterly Meeting Conference of Missions, Elwood, Ind., the 8th inst., was well attended, and addressed by Sarah E. Lindley, lately returned from the Holy Land. She is identified with the Mexican missions at Cedral and Catorcè. She also spoke at Vermillion Grove on Seventh-day evening and First-day morning. Much interest was shown in the work in Mexico.

Both the meeting and the academy at Vermillion Grove seem to be prospering under able spiritual and financial leadership of those who are willing to be led by the Holy Spirit, along lines of Christian faithfulness and liberality. An endowment of $10,000 has lately been received by the trustees for the use of the academy. There are about sixty pupils, and the outlook for the coming year is most favorable.

The following is a corrected list of the pastors located at present in Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting, Iowa. At Cumming and Commerce, Edwin Loft, Cumming, Iowa; at Earlham, Charles S. White, Earlham, Iowa; at Bear Creek and Wiscotta, E. Howard Brown, Earlham, Iowa; at Linden and East Linn, Murry F. Corsby, Linden, Iowa; at Canby, Golda E. Thompson, Canby, Iowa; at Glenwood, Karl W. Hildreth, Glenwood, Iowa; at Burr Oak and Sharpsburgh, Allen H. Briggs, Glenwood, Iowa. Stuart and West Milton are not supplied.

Friends of Twelfth Street Meeting, Philadelphia, have planned to organize a missionary study circle. They intend to hold a short series of classes for the earnest study of the history of foreign missions; the series to consist of eight weekly classes of an hour each, to meet at the Friends' Institute, on Third-day, at 4.30 o'clock. The preliminary meeting will be held Third-day, Tenth month 25th, at 4.30 o'clock. An explanation of the plan of work will be given by the chairman, and the subject, "Why We Ought to Make a Study of the Missionary Movement," will be discussed by David G. Alsop, Alfred C. Garrett, C. Walter Borton, Rachel C. Reeve and W. E. Cadbury. A most cordial invitation is extended.

J. E. Rhoads & Sons, of Philadelphia, manufacturers of leather belting, have recently declined to submit bids for a contract to supply belting to the Navy and War Departments. The head of the firm is Jonathan E. Rhoads, brother of Dr. James E. Rhoads, former editor of Friends' Review. An editorial in the Indianapolis News, for Ninth month 21st, contains the following appreciative words on Friends: "The Indiana Friends have always been good citizens. They have never yielded their convictions to the demands of expediency. They have never compromised with wrong. The most peaceful people on earth, they have yet fought bravely, in their own way, and at great sacrifice, for what they believed to be right. There can be no doubt that their work for temperance and sound morality generally has told on the civilization of this country. Indiana certainly owes much to these God-fearing men and women whose only ambition has been to see their duty clearly and to do it bravely. They have set a high standard. It is for the rest of us to try and live up to it."

The first Quarterly Meeting of Friends in Colorado was opened by direction of Iowa Yearly Meeting, at Boulder, Tenth month 1st, and was a season of great favor and blessing. It is to be known as Denver Quarterly Meeting. From outside the limits of the quarterly meeting there were present from Iowa two of the Yearly Meetings committee, appointed to attend the opening, viz., William Jasper Hadley, superintendent of evangelistic work, and J. H. Hadley, a minister, John and Nettie Riley, late of California, who are at present engaged in evangelistic work in Colorado Springs, and Evi Sharpless, of Iowa, who for the past few weeks has been holding meetings at some of the gold-mining camps in the mountains not far from Boulder. This Quarterly Meeting comprises three Monthly Meetings: Denver, thirty miles from Boulder; Paonia, four hundred miles distant, on the other side of the Rocky Mountain range, and Boulder. Quite a large number were in attendance from Denver, L. Maria Deane and Charles Lewis, from Paonia, and Sarah Harris, a minister, and Calvin Marshall, from Colorado Springs. In all the sessions the presence of the Lord was manifest; the preaching of the Gospel was clear and definite and in the power of the Spirit. On Sabbath evening there were two conversions, and others gave testimony to definite blessing. George D. Weeks, pastor at Denver, was appointed clerk. The entire membership of the Quarterly Meeting is nearly two hundred, with prospect for an increase soon. Denver Quarterly Meeting makes the twentieth belonging to Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Respecting the old Chichester Meeting House, of which a short description appeared in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, of Tenth month 6th, 1904, the following additional particulars have since been learned, and are now contributed. The Meeting is a preparative one under the jurisdiction of the Monthly Meeting (Hicksite), held at Concordville, which meets there twice in each year. The records show that the first authorized or official meeting held on those grounds was on First month 17th, 1684 (March, O. S.). The property was deeded Tenth month 4th, 1688 (December, O. S.), for the consideration of one shilling and sixpence, by James Browne to six trustees "for the use of the people of God called Quakers." The original ground embraced two acres, the remaining premises having been added afterward. The present house, built in 1769, is certainly the second, and is believed to be the third building; the first, according to tradition, having been of logs, though not so mentioned in the records. The ancient stone horse-blocks for pillion riders are still in place, though long disused and considerably dilapidated. The principal door (now sheltered by modern outside doors opening outwards) shows a number of bullet-holes through it, the bullets having ranged through the house and somewhat defaced the gallery seats. Tradition says they were fired by Hessian soldiers pursuing a squad of Washington's men flying from their defeat on the Brandywine, who sought to refuge in the Meeting House. In the rear part of the Meeting there are still preserved a number of the original benches, which are simply hewn white-oak planks about three inches thick without backs, supported on stout legs driven into two-inch auger holes. They are probably older than the house itself and are as good as when first made.

DIED.

HAWORTH.—At his home, near New London, Ind., Ninth month 17th, 1904, Arthur L., son of Morris and Elizabeth Haworth, aged 53 years. He was a member of New London Monthly Meeting, and often testified to the goodness of God.

SROUT.—At his home, Paoli, Ind., Ninth month 5th, 1904, Amos Stout, aged over 53 years. He was a member of Paoli Meeting and was largely instrumental in building the meeting-house and organizing the congregation at that place.

WILLETS.—Near Dublin, Ind., Ninth month 30th, 1904, Jehu L., son of Ellis and Rachel Willets, aged nearly 75 years. He was a birthright member of Friends. A man who lived honorably and godly and in death knew no fear, but rejoiced in the acceptance of his God and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

WRIGHT.—At his home, near Russiaville, Ind., Ninth month 19th, 1904, William Wright, at the advanced age of 81 years. A member of New London (Ind.) Monthly Meeting.

SAFEST FOOD.

IN ANY TIME OF TROUBLE IS GRAPE-NUTS.

Food to rebuild the strength and that is predigested must be selected when one is convalescent. At this time there is nothing so valuable as Grape-Nuts for the reason that this food is all nourishment and is also all digestible nourishment. A woman who used it says:

"Some time ago I was very ill with typhoid fever, so ill everyone thought I would die, even myself. It left me so weak I could not properly digest food of any kind and I also had much bowel trouble which left me a weak, helpless wreck.

"I needed nourishment as badly as anyone could, but none of the tonics helped me until I finally tried Grape-Nuts food morning and evening. This not only supplied food that I thought delicious as could be, but it also made me perfectly well and strong again so I can do all my housework, sleep well, can eat anything without any trace of bowel trouble and for that reason alone Grape-Nuts food is worth its weight in gold." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Typhoid fever like some other diseases attacks the bowels and frequently sets up bleeding and makes them for months incapable of digesting the starches and therefore predigested Grape-Nuts is invaluable for the well-known reason that in Grape-Nuts all the starches have been transformed into grape sugar. This means that the first stage of digestion has been mechanically accomplished in Grape-Nuts food at the factories and therefore anyone, no matter how weak the stomach, can handle it and grow strong, for all the nourishment is still there.

persistent rumors that the Russian Treasury officials may draw upon Russian church property in order to provide funds for war. It is even rumored that the Holy Synod has been approached with the suggestion that the churches and monasteries voluntarily offer their valuables to the State.

It is a very encouraging report which the Washington Department of Agriculture puts out regarding the crops of later maturity. The condition of corn is placed at 83.9 against 84.6 a month ago, and a ten-year average of 78.3. A crop of something like 2,350,000,000 bushels is promised. The minor cereal crops are nearly all very favorable—oats, barley, rye and buckwheat reporting a condition above the recent average. Potatoes are given the high condition of 89.5, compared with 74.6 last year and a ten-year average of 73.5.

The American Anti-Saloon League is to hold its annual convention at Columbus, Ohio, this year. The dates are Eleventh month 16-18, inclusive. The following is a partial list of the talent already engaged for this meeting. Luther B. Wilson, of Chattanooga, President of the League; George R. Stuart, of Tennessee; Congressman Charles E. Littlefield, of Maine; Louis Albert Banks, of New York; E. S. Chapman, of California; John G. Woolley, of Chicago; G. W. Young, of Kentucky, and Howard H. Russell, of New York. The convention proper is to be preceded by a six days' conference of the State superintendents and field workers of the League, and will be held at Columbus also. This conference is in reality to be a "School of Methods." Those desiring further information should write to General Superintendent P. A. Baker, 610 the New Hayden Building, Columbus, Ohio.

For the twenty-second time the friends of the Indian are assembled in annual conference at Lake Mohonk, this week. In addition to the usual discussion of Indian affairs, provision has been made for an extended discussion of questions, except such as have a purely political bearing, concerning the well-being of the peoples of the Philippines, Porto Rico and Hawaii, with such well-known speakers as Fred W. Atkinson and E. B. Bryan, former superintendents of public instruction in the Philippines, and W. Leon Pepperman, former civil service commissioner there; the Hon. J. H. Hollander, former treasurer of Porto Rico, and Martin G. Brumbaugh and Samuel McCune Lindsay, former superintendents of Porto Rican schools. The conference will enjoy the unbounded hospitality of Albert K. Smiley, by whom it has been called. Accounts of the progress of Indian affairs during the year will be made public and there will be thorough discussion of several Indian problems.

The Vladivostok squadron seized mail from the Calchas last Seventh month, and the details of the affair are just coming to light. It seems that the Russians have violated international rules in a number of particulars by detaining and even confiscating mail to which they had no right. The new Postmaster-General, Robert J. Wynne, has taken up the matter with the President, but there is a good deal of doubt in official circles as to what can be done in the matter. Wharton's Digest of International Law gives the rule to be that where a vessel is seized by a belligerent and contraband is found on board mails must be forwarded to their destination by the next steamer. It always has been the practice of the United States to give passage to mail steamers belonging to a neutral. Not only these rules have been violated, but it now turns out that the Russians opened registered mail addressed to the cruiser Cincinnati, then at Nagasaki, Japan. This discovery adds a new feature to the issue, since it is equivalent to interfering with domestic mail.

It has become apparent that with the present prospective advance in the size of vessels the Panama Canal as at first planned would be useless for the best ships in a few years. Plans are therefore to be made to increase the depth to nearly forty feet. Also since the cuts must be made so deep the question has arisen, Why not bring them to the level of the sea? One difficulty to be met in doing this is the difference between the tides. Those in the Caribbean Sea rise only two or three feet, while tides on the Pacific side reach twelve feet. It is thought, however, that the difficulty caused by the variance can be overcome by the construction of tidal gates. The finest work done by Americans since taking charge is the solving of the problem of the Chagres River. In spring freshets this sometimes rises forty feet and pours out an enormous flood of water which it has puzzled the engineers to know how to dispose of safely. Mr. George Ehle with a party has been exploring the river for four months and has discovered that the course of the river can be diverted, so that, instead of flowing into the Caribbean Sea, it will empty into the Pacific Ocean. This renders practicable a sea-level canal, and saves $20,000,000 of the amount estimated for locks, which may be used in deepening the cuts to the level of the sea.

BOOK REVIEWS.

Sunday-school Teacher Training. By H. M. Hamill, published by the Sunday-school Times Co., Philadelphia. Price, 50 cents. This is a very valuable little book, full of good suggestions which should be in the hands of every Sabbath school worker. It sets forth the needs, methods and agencies which are pertinent and practical for present-day work.

A Woman's Life Work. By Laura S. Haviland (Memorial Edition), published by S. B. Shav. Price, $1.00. This work is now in its third edition. It is a graphic, first-hand sketch of many stirring events which happened during the closing day of slavery. It is also rich in its information concerning the W. C. T. U. work and other reforms and philanthropic efforts.

Traffic in Girls and Work of Rescue Missions. Edited and published by Charlton Edholm. Price, 30 cents. It is a plain, concise statement of a most nefarious business which is carried on in our own country. The subject is almost too terrible to contemplate, but it is one with which Christian people must deal, and this little pamphlet can help them do it.

Helps on Daniel, the Prophet of Gentile Times. By Edgar P. Ellyson, published by the Christian Messenger Publishing Co., Marshalltown, Iowa. Price, 50 cents. This is a small volume written especially to help young people understand and appreciate this interesting prophet.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a table-spoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

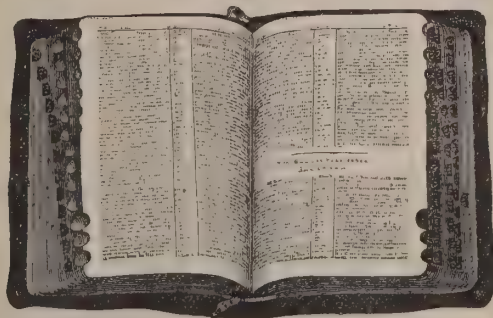

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

Filling me with an infinite overflow;
Not to a shape that dwells within my heart,
Clothed in perfections love and truth assigned thee,
But to the God thou knowest that thou art.*

Not that my mind looks up to thee clear-eyed;
Not that it struggles in fast cerements tied;

THE TRUE SUCCESSION.

THE QUESTION is often asked, Which group of Friends in this year of grace 1904 holds the right to be called "the true seed," the genuine "George Fox Friends," the true descendants of the "early Friends?" There are "Hicksites," "Wilburites" and "Gurneyites;" there are "Progressives" and "Conservatives;" there are "slow" Friends and "fast" Friends; there are "sound" Friends and "unsound" Friends; there are "quietists" and "shouters;" "evangelical" Friends and "modern-thought" Friends; there are "four-fold-gospel" Friends and "single-experience" Friends. Which are in the true line of succession, which have kept the faith pure and unchanged? Not one of the groups. A court of law would probably give the legal title to one group rather than to another, but the historical student can boldly say that there is not a single person on the planet who has preserved the primitive Quaker idea unchanged. The so-called Conservative Friend lacks the fervor, the passion, the evangelical power, the compelling message, the apostolic spirit, the readiness to preach in street and market, in field and public buildings "to win some." He has caught many of the essential truths, as truths, but they have crystallized in his hands and so have lost the dynamic quality which made them once such tremendous forces. He is always in danger, too, of falling into pride and exclusiveness, of cutting himself loose from those with whom he does not agree, for fear that his precious truth may be endangered by rude contact.

Yes, but the Progressive has his lacks and losses, too. He has kept much of the fervor and passion, his truth is more fluid and molten, but he cares too little for the precious principles which have been won at the cost of blood and sacrifice. He does not realize enough the value of the great qualities of character and solidity. He runs after what will "work" for the present and make things "move." He has his eye too often on quick results and does not have long vision. There is a little uncertainty about the permanence of what he builds. Similar strong points and corresponding weak points could readily be pointed out in all the other kinds of Quakerism. Every phase of it can find some support for itself in early Quakerism, and in the writings of the first "pillar" Friends. But at the same time the careful critic can see gaps and misses—great landslides of truth and practice which completely change the present type from the ancient. It is forever impossible to carry any ism down through the ages unchanged. It cannot be done. The influences of a changing world silently change our ways of viewing truth and our practices. Those who try to preserve, or conserve, truth in crystallized form—to "keep the faith" in air-tight jars—they change it most. The true successors are never the persons who have preserved their truth like mummy wheat. It is rather they who have flung it out boldly into the great seed field of the world, and who have preserved the spirit and power of the founders.

Of the many Quaker isms not one reproduces the form of Christianity which was such a mighty factor of the seventeenth century. Each has kept something, each has lost something, and some have added something. But that does not destroy the claim of any to be genuine successors. The loss of the spirit of early Quakerism, the failure to speak to this age as those founders spoke to their age, the failure to carry out into full development what the primitive Friends began, this is what defeats the claim to be in the true succession. The truth is kept only when it lives and grows and bears fruit, thirty or sixty or an hundredfold.

JOINED TO THE LORD IN ONE SPIRIT.

A FOURTH point must be clearly grasped before any adequate view of the atonement can be reached.* It is this important truth God operates directly upon man. Redemption can never properly be treated as a transaction which begins and is completed outside of the man himself who is to be redeemed. What we have come to call the atonement is a Divine fact, but it is also a human fact. Something occurs in the man's nature. There have been theories of the atonement which left this truth out, or which thrust it into the background. Such theories hold that the atonement was a momentary, finished event—a fact transacted in the heavenlies. They ignore the part which the Holy Spirit takes in His operation on man, and it is just that which is here being emphasized.

It is a primary truth of our Christianity that God reaches man directly. Nobody is insulated. As ocean floods inlets, as sunlight bathes flowers, as air fills all openings so (only spiritually instead of spatially) God comes wherever there is a finite spirit—a soul. God operating on finite spirits is the Holy Ghost. The presence of God revealed to man is what the New Testament calls the Holy Spirit. The term is apparently never used for God except where God is thought of as acting upon human lives: He shall guide you; He shall convict you; He shall be your anointing; He shall be your Comforter; you shall be changed by the Spirit; the Spirit shall dwell in you; you shall dwell in the Spirit; the Spirit shall witness to you your sonship; you shall have the demonstration of the Spirit within you. These are only a few of the ways in which God operates on man as the Spirit. All this means that man has a capacity for union with God. Sin hinders, ruins, wrecks, may even destroy, this capacity. But to be a person is to possess a possibility of being “joined to the Lord in one spirit”—to use Paul’s great phrase. Salvation is thus not a scheme, or theory, or transaction. It is an actual occurrence, or change, or creation in a life. It comes about when man co-operates with God and it cannot come any other way. All this is generally recognized, and most Christians hold some such view, namely, that man may turn to God and partake of His nature, and that that is salvation.

The point which is too often missed is this: Through the operation of the Spirit it is possible for a man to become identified with Christ—to substitute Him for the old self and so to share with Him all that He did in His incarnation. Paul’s teaching on the atonement cannot be understood with this fact left out. Through Christ God reaches down to our deepest need, and through the Holy Spirit we may be carried up into His life—so that a man may even say, “Christ lives in me!” “I am crucified with Christ;” “I am buried with Him;” “I have gone down into death with Him;” “I count all things ‘loss’ in my determination to have a fellowship in His sufferings, to be conformed unto His death and to rise with Him from the dead.” In such bold language the great apostle announces the fact that there is a possible identity of self with Christ, a substitution of His nature for ours—an actual re-creation.

This is no attempt to tell what the atonement is.

It is only an attempt to present a spiritual fact, everywhere recognized in the New Testament and which is of essential importance in reaching a true view of the atonement.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

SOME of our readers are over-ready to discover partisan reference in our editorials. We have said no word with a view to influencing anybody’s vote. It is perfectly legitimate for a religious paper to take sides in a political issue, but it ought to be done under a very weighty religious concern when it is done, and not merely as a matter of personal preference. When we do speak out on partisan matters, it will be with no uncertain sound, and it will not leave our readers guessing as to our position.

THE SIMPLE LIFE.*

BY CHARLES WAGNER.

First of all, let me give you an explanation. My English is not completely six months old, and I think you people will think of me as a young Englishman, and if I make a mistake, I have the consolation to see you laugh and see you be happy. (Laughter.)

When I find in the Friends’ meetings this silence, so full of contemplation, so thoughtful; this speaking without any service, this plain speaking, I feel a Friend also; and I discovered that you in your own Society teach things which I also believe to be the very truth; and every day when I meet with Friends, either in Philadelphia, in Boston or in other cities, I feel a kindly spirit; I feel at home with you. So it is not as a stranger; it is not as a Parisian—any Frenchman—any man from the far continent you have called to speak to your children and your scholars; it is a man of your family.

The prime requisite of an instructor is a deep and warm desire to learn more, so that he can teach you and your children. It is the rule of life to learn and to teach; to give and to receive. That is all I came for; and I offer what I have, I offer the best I have; I offer the reserve of my experience, of my thought, of my fightings (because I fought hard in my life); and I will express here in this meeting—in which I see so many young people, young girls, young boys and their parents and teachers—I will express some ideas which I think will be useful for you.

I trust I will be led. Every man needs to have an ideal. Ideal is an object of first necessity. We often have a measure of what is of first necessity in a well-ordered society: air, light, space, talk, house, birth. Before all this, man, being a man, needs to have an ideal; and without ideal the rest is lost—is nothing. So I say to the young people beginning life, you need, first, to have an ideal; and this ideal may be—ought to be—an ideal of simplicity; and the ideal of simplicity for man is to become a man, nothing other.

There are young people who have the ideal to become a physician; others to become a good teacher; others to become mothers of children, and others have other ideals. It is well, but let me tell you, if you will be a physician, you have to learn many things about the constitution of man, the sick man, the healthy man, but after all if you are only a physician and not a man; or if you are at first a physician and not a man, a feeling man, a warm-hearted man, you will be a bad physician. The first condition for a good physician is to be a man first and when he comes to a sick man he will not only look at the sick man's eye—at the case of sickness; because it may be very interesting and may be an object of any review for a physician—but he will look at the sick man lying—at the fellow-man, the suffering fellow-man; and he will understand his task not only by his knowledge as a physician, but by his feeling as a man, as a father, or as a son; and he will be useful for him and will perhaps cure him; or if not he will make him feel the human heart which throbs when he shares truly the destiny of another. He will come in every chamber of sickness and sit down by the bed-side like a messenger of the Lord God, a center of thought, a center of light.

Now, if you will be teacher—a teacher of languages—well, there is nothing more interesting and really graceful than the old languages in these times—in this hurrying time. It is a good thing to come back to the calm and quiet of the ancients. I love to see old people smiling at the young, having a heart for the young; it is very well, and one of the best things we can have. If you will be a teacher in this language, very well; but you have to be, first, a whole man, and not a grammarian—not only a rehearser of old sentences: if you will understand old books, books of the old Greeks, Romans or these other books of old Hebrews, of the old prophets, you must be at first a man, a living man; you must be a soul; you must be a heart, ever warm in contact with the spirit of the past; and if you would be the best teacher, you will have to be a man with a soul, with a heart; otherwise you would never understand the old blind singer, Homer; you would never understand the prophecies of Isaiah; you would never understand the Psalms. You have to be a man for all and bring the cords of your heart into the inspirations of the old texts; you have to bring your blood, you have to bring your flesh in contact with the dust of the old pilgrims. If you cannot do it, you will be a dry teacher and a dead teacher of dead languages, and not a living teacher of languages expressing living things and living souls—of immortal language in which in us speaks immortal souls.

In everything remember—young people, young girls and young boys—in everything to-day remember first you have to be men. If you will be an engineer or a captain leading forces, an architect building houses, churches, you have to know the nature of stones, iron, all the materials used for building houses; you have to know not only the laws of equilibrium; you have to know not only the very laws of beauty, the lines and works of ancient architects, but you have to be a man. Because if you have to lead men and to help men, and you know only machinery, you have very useless trials, and you will have to fight the grandest difficulty, which will overwhelm your best will and your fine scholarship. You will meet before you the will of your fellow-man of views which have to abide, and you will hurt it like a wound. If you will be a captain of men and have a war as is raging to-day, to be sure of results you must reach the heart of men. Look at any good captain; if he knows only the laws of war—he must know the heart of the soldiers. Nobody can be in anything a good leader if he knows only the laws of strategy, of direction; he must know the human, the human part, the human mind; because, for knowing the heart of man, we have to be men. So I say the beginning of an ideal is to learn to be men—to be men at first.

Now a man is prepared for life by a strong, often very hard, preparation. A man is like iron put in the fire and then smithed between iron and iron; and that can be called the difficulty of the beginning. There is no rock to smith any firm and solid character in a young man or a young girl if we have only, in the beginning of life, good time and happiness and all kinds of delightful things. Don't misunderstand me! I am for enjoyment. I stand for joy in all the life here—in the life of an old man, of an old woman. We need sunshine; we need life; we need the bright ray of stars in the darkness of this earth; and those who have a moral which speaks against joy and whose religion is shadowy and dark, are not in a good way. We have to teach, to preach, to speak to the soul. Joy, joy is the sign of confidence in God; joy is the sign of good-will; joy is the sign of brotherly feeling; and we shall have souls of sunshine, smiling spirits, and not shadowy faces and dark spirits and minds. But there is to be attained that joy, the real joy, the higher joy, the joy of the higher life and not the joy of a more lower existence with a lowering of ideals, the joy of conquest as the result of fighting found in the most difficult battles of life. So I say young people must know among the first laws of life that character, that their high mind and real human feeling, can only be compassed, can only be as a result of often difficult circumstances in our lives.

Now I have to go on on another subject. There is for young people an old difficulty: it is to be true to their own inspiration, to the inner voice, to what we can call personality in us. Young people often have a certain obstinacy, and persist in the beginning with an obstinacy which hinders them from understanding, from receiving advice. They cannot hear us; between their interests is a distance and often an abyss. We call, and they cannot hear; we make signs, and they cannot see; they have, as the old prophet says, eyes, and cannot see, ears, and cannot hear; and it is very often an illustration of pride, of self-contentment, hindering young people from being rich by the experience of others.

We have to be humble; we have to bow before God; we have to be careful not to lose any opportunity for learning and for receiving; but if young people are too receptive—if young people accept with too great facility the directions, the leading, the advice of the directions, there is a danger of losing the most important factor of life, the originality of the individual. Here is the great goal, to be modest, to be able to learn, really to hear, really to accept, to have a mind of a saint and dare to be ourselves, to be true to the inner voice. That is a very difficult stand, and this difficulty can not be avoided by any one. What may be the result of such action; whatever may be the exterior arrangement of life; whatever may be the school, this difficulty has to be avoided by ourselves, and I say to young people, be very modest, be kind, be ready to hear, be ready to learn tradition, the experience of others, inspirations of the past—to have regard to the wars and fightings and sufferings of our forefathers; and, to be able to inherit tradition, to receive the treasure we have to be respectful. Respect and admiration is a sense of soul by which the light of truth comes in ourselves; it is for young men like to a flower—the power of receiving air and light from above; and young people having that—the sense of admiration—having the deep feeling of the value and of the authority of those who have some message—such young people are enabled to greet with deep and warm heart and with joy, with happiness, every man and every woman where worth is. Young people having no more the sense of moral, intellectual and religious responsibility; having no more the capacity to look above and being in confusion, without that Guide and Stay the greatest of all; being children more by neglectfulness than being scholars and disciples and teachers, such young people have blocked and closed the doors. The light of heaven, the light of science, the light of God, the light of knowledge comes down in our spirits. So I say to them, be modest, be kind, be ready to receive and have the feeling of man; then you will be a man.

But be careful, be careful and trust thyself. Every man of us is an especial agent of God and like a mirror wherein are revealed the imagings of his own heart. Let us preserve that heart in its infantile purity. God has given to each of us His own impress and signature, and called each of us by His own name. You are not an example of a race; you are an individual soul. That distinguishes man from inferior animals, which are only examples of the race. Every man is not a copy; the Everlasting Painter has painted the features and face of every man of us. We have not to be only a copy of what has been before and in the old times; we have to dare to have our own face, our own physiognomy. We are forces of God, creators, original creators; and nobody can fail to realize that this picture, his physiognomy, he has received by the express will of God.

Be careful, be silent, kind, modest; but hear and listen to the inner voice; hear and listen what it still says to you and you, children and scholars of Friends; not only having this great educational privilege, but having the doctrine and the belief of the inner light, of that inner light which is the most precious treasury of every man. I would plead you to never forget, to never lose this teaching which can make you firm, stable characters. And we need characters! In this world nothing is more rare than real character. We may be white, but we have no real character; and you find—in this world you find ninety-nine men who have the pride of their own person and of their personage, and only one real character, modest but firm, and to whom, if he knows simply that he has two sides of truth, he fears nobody and conceals nothing, but speaks the truth, saying, "Yes," if he believes yes, and saying simply "No," if he feels that he should say no, even if he would have his race against him.

Now I will finish at the ending up. We are all to be children of our God. Perhaps here in the city may be men saying: "Mr. Wagner, you have written a book called 'Simple Life,' and a book on America. Do you truly think, now you have seen America, that the simple life—what you hold simple life—may be put into practice and become a reality in this our industrious country of America? Have you seen New York, Mr. Wagner? Have you seen the side-shows of New York? Have you seen people in the morning, and have you seen the night of people—the night of smoke?" Yes, I have seen all these things, and I believe that simple life is not only possible, but necessary in America—in our country. We have worked very much in this time. I am afraid we perhaps have worked against ourselves. I am afraid our civilization as it now is may be really dangerous to man's soul, because the place of the soul is no more to be found.

When I look at our cities and at the smoke of a Pittsburg; when I look at the tremendous cities in which the poor children have no more air to breathe, nor light to look at, nor space for playing; when I look at those tremendous wastes of life which we call our modern gigantic cities, it seems to me I look over a wilderness, a sunburned and endless dry wilderness, in which is no more place for the soul, the feeling heart of man.

Oh, yes! simple life; it is what we need in this time—noble life towards which we have to come back, like the pilgrim, tired, hungry and dusty trying hard to find a well of water like a child having gone astray and all over the world he sighed for coming to the father-heart, to the mother-heart. We, in this hurried and overworked time and civilization, are crying for simplicity.

Not only we are ripe for simplicity, but there is no country, no nation to compare with yours in America for being able to have simplicity. Simplicity is one of your oldest and your best and your most sacred traditions. When I go into Independence Hall in Philadelphia, it seems to me to be a sanctuary; and I look at your grand ancestors—the Pilgrim Fathers, Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Lincoln—old, gray, but simple. Plain, nothing sacrificed to exterior, but all true; and when I hurried a fortnight ago to Washington in the White House to see your President, I found no gorgeous exterior dwelling, but only the moral character of your nation, of your democracy—I found the man who is the center of your national life and your democracy now, which is strong and has more interest, I claim, than any power in the old lands; I found him simple, one of the greatest men in his time and without any aristocracy. I believe that this land of simplicity—that is the stronghold of simplicity—if simplicity would be spread all over the world it would be powerful; it would be due to your great ancestors; you ought to maintain simplicity and some have in this present time; and all this noising, all this running will go on, but we will have peace; we will be quiet; we will think about ourselves; we will find ourselves again, and we will become men; and that is why I have come over here and also (I speak in very imperfect English) I have come here because I feel it was my duty to come among persons not only to speak to them, but to look at them and learn by them; because we are all citizens of the world; we are all learners, and we need each other. Now I have only to thank you for your sympathy this evening and to leave you with this impression of happiness to speak to you and to your children about the most important concerns in human life.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Kansas Yearly Meeting includes much territory outside of the State of Kansas, there being several meetings in Nebraska, many in Oklahoma and Indian Territories, a few in Missouri and one in Texas. It consists of fifteen Quarterly Meetings which comprise one hundred and twelve meetings. There are also thirty-eight other places where workers hold meetings regularly.

The annual assembly this year was held at Lawrence, Kan., and that city was celebrating its semi-centennial at the same time. Many of the Friends who were in attendance can tell of the early days when Kansas was a new country, and of the wonderful progress made since they moved from eastern homes. Friends have had a large share in developing and molding this part of the United States, and in bringing about its present splendid condition. Wherever a few families of Friends settled they were an influence for good, often organizing a meeting and always taking a prominent place in movements for the welfare of the people.

One Friend gave a short account of the beginning of Christian work in the Indian Territory in a very small way, and how it had grown under God's blessing until there are now three Quarterly Meetings.

Reports show the membership of the Yearly Meeting to be 11,264, a net increase of 155 in the last year. The following extracts from the minute on the State of Society, show the spiritual condition of the meetings:

"Reports from the Quarterly Meetings indicate much spiritual growth among our members, and a growing interest in all the departments of Christian work in which we are engaged. Some of our subordinate meetings mention a tendency to neglect our midweek meetings and also negligence in family worship. We would admonish our members that in this age of increasing activity in worldly things, we be not forgetful of our obligations to God."

The Evangelistic and Pastoral Board gave a very satisfactory account of faithful labor in spite of difficulties, and great blessing from the Lord upon the efforts of the workers; the accessions to the church being twice as many as the year before. Many of the younger members are active in service, and earnest in everything that pertains to the life of the Church.

The meetings among the natives of Alaska and the Indians gave much encouragement, as we heard of changed lives where the Saviour has entered, and of bright Christian examples influencing others to find redemption and peace. One of our members, a Pottawatomie Indian, gave her testimony of the power of Christ to change us from darkness to light; and as we listened, the "old, old story" seemed more precious than ever, and our hearts were tendered with a deeper insight into the fathomless love of God.

The presence of Samuel A. Jackson, the superintendent of the mission at Douglas, Alaska, and his clear account of the field, helped all who heard him to a better understanding of the work. Josiah Dillon, a minister of Kansas Yearly Meeting, said he felt called to give a year or two to work in Alaska and expected to go soon.

Home Mission work is carried on in needy places, and the North End Mission, Wichita, is a striking example of what can be accomplished. It began in the faithfulness of a Friend who could not attend the Bible school, and so started one in his own house. The attendance increased until the furniture had to be put out of doors to accommodate the people. Then a hall was rented, and when this was too small a larger one was built by subscriptions and donations. Not only is there a flourishing Bible school, but a kindergarten was started for the poor around the packing houses, and many needy have been helped. Twenty-five have joined the Monthly Meeting.

The past year has been one of real progress at Friends' University, Wichita, and the improvements made have added much in convenience and appearance. The children of the Yearly Meeting take an interest in the endowment fund, and have added to it this year. The need of making repairs and alterations in North and South Halls was laid before the meeting, and a subscription taken toward this work.

Reports of the condition of the academies were encouraging.

During the evening devoted to temperance, an effective lesson was given on the need for earnest work by means of ribbons of different lengths, illustrating the amounts spent annually in the country for liquor, tobacco, bread, education, church work and foreign missions.

Though the membership is almost clear in regard to using alcoholic liquor, the many expressions in the meeting show that Kansas Yearly Meeting will not be satisfied until all its members are recorded as free on this point.

When the subject of "Peace and War" was under consideration, a letter was sent to President Roosevelt asking him to continue his efforts in the line of arbitration, and in endeavoring to bring the Russo-Japanese war to a speedy close.

Christian Endeavor and Bible school work are in excellent condition. George N. and Ella Hartley gave an interesting account of the Sabbath school convention in Jerusalem, and told of the many proofs of the truth of prophecy to be seen in Palestine.

The following Friends from other Yearly Meetings were in attendance, and their messages and advice were helpful and uplifting: From New England Yearly Meeting, Emeline H. Tuttle; from Wilmington, Nathan T. and Esther G. Frame; from Indiana, Estella Hammond; from Western, Solomon B. and Mary S. Woodard and David Commons; from Iowa, Hepsy H. Hoag, Marion E. and Mary J. Reisinger, W. Mahlon Perry, Fred T. Coppock, Lurana M. Terrell and Minnie M. Pearson.

ELEVENTH MONTH 6, 1904.

JOASH, THE BOY KING.

2 Kings 11: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice.—Prov. 29: 2.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 31.—Joash, the boy king. 2 Kings 11: 1-10.
Third-day, Eleventh mo. 1.—Joash, the boy king. 2 Kings 11: 11-16.
Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 2.—Baal worship overthrown. 2 Kings 11: 17-21.
Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 3.—Ahaziah's reign. 2 Chron. 22.
Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 4.—Joash made king. 2 Chron. 23: 1-15.
Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 5.—The wicked destroyed. Psa. 101.
First-day, Eleventh mo. 6.—God our refuge. Psa. 46.

Time.—About 836 B. C.

Place.—Jerusalem.

Rulers.—Jehu, king of Israel, 842-815 B. C.; Athaliah, queen of Judah, 843-837 B. C.; Hazael, king of Syria at Damascus; Shalmaneser II, king of Assyria.

Prophets.—Elisha in Israel.

Parallel Account.—2 Chron. 22: 10 to 24: 3.

Our lessons now pass from the kingdom of Israel to the kingdom of Judah. The worship of Baal had been introduced into Judah, and Athaliah, the queen, the daughter of Ahab, had succeeded in keeping up Baal-worship for about six years. See 2 Kings 11: 18. In Israel the reformation had been due to the prophets, while in Judah it was due to the temple priesthood. There evidently was at this time a revolt of public sentiment against the heathen observances of the courts.

The marriage of Joram (Jehoram), son of Jehoshaphat, with Athaliah, daughter of Ahab and Jezebel, was most unfortunate. Joram was weak, while Athaliah was strong-minded and able. The course of the king and queen is told in 2 Chronicles 21: 1-17. He reigned but a few years, was succeeded by his young son, who died after a year. What followed is described in the lesson.

1. "Ahaziah." Son of Joram and Athaliah. "That her son was dead." See 2 Chron. 22: 1-9. "Destroyed all the seed royal." Put all the legitimate heirs to death. This included her own grandchildren. She herself wished to rule. Up to this time there had been no queen regnant in either Israel or Judah.

2. "Jehosheba." She was a daughter of Joram, but not of Athaliah, she was therefore half-sister of Azariah. From 2 Chronicles we learn that she was wife of Jehoida, the high-priest, and this explains how the child could with ease be hid in the temple.

3. "In the house of the Lord." In the rooms which were built around the temple for the accommodation of the priests and attendants.

4. Jehoida, the high-priest, started the insurrection against Athaliah. "Rulers." Better, "Captains." "Carites." R. V. Probably foreign mercenaries. "Covenant." An agreement. Made them swear by the house of Jehovah. Compare Matt. 23: 16.

5. "A third part." Those who are to take part in the enterprise are those who had Sabbath duty, and of these those who were going off duty were to watch.

6. "Gate of Sur." It is not known what gate this was. "So shall ye keep the watch of the house and be a barrier." R. V. The house is the royal palace. See verse 19.

7. "And the two companies of you, even all that go forth on the Sabbath, shall keep the watch," etc. R. V.

8. "Compass the king." Surround him. "Ranges." Ranks. Keep close watch over the king is the meaning of the verse.

10. "It has been suggested that the weapons were David's own spear and shield, which had been preserved as relics in the temple." The sight of them would be a great stimulus.

11. The directions were carried out, but exactly how is not clearly stated, "the meaning seems to be that the guards were drawn up in ranks across the court from south to north, and facing the altar and the temple."

12. "Brought forth the king's son." Joash, the son of Ahaziah, who had been hid. He was about seven years old. "Gave him the testimony." Probably the law. See Deut. 17: 18, 19. "Anointed him." To make the choice particularly solemn. The practice does not seem to have been followed with all kings. "Clapped their hands." Perhaps a universal expression of joy. "God save the king." Literally, "Let the king live." Compare 1 Sam.

10: 24; 1 Kings 1: 25. May the king live forever is a regular Eastern expression.

13. So well and so secretly had the plans been made and carried out that Athaliah was taken completely by surprise, or if she had heard rumors of the plot she does not seem to have believed them. "She came to the people." It is not likely that she came alone, some of her guards doubtless were with her.

14. "The king stood by the pillar." "Apparently the spot where the king stood when he worshipped." 2 Kings 23: 3; 2 Chron. 34: 31. "All the people of the land rejoiced." This would imply that the insurrection took place at the time of some festival.

15. "Have her forth between the ranks." "Let her not be slain in the house of the Lord." The meaning is, Take her out of the sacred precincts of the temple, for blood must not be shed in the temple. "Him that followeth her" refers to her attendants and any others who might take up her course.

16. "So they made way for her; and she went by the way of the horses' entry to the king's house. R. V. This would seem to mean either she was taken to the royal stables and there slain, or down a private way to the palace and slain there. Compare verse 19.

TOPIC FOR ELEVENTH MONTH SIXTH.

SOME OF GOD'S PROMISES THAT CHEER ME.

2 Pet. 1: 1-4. (A promise meeting.)

Second-day, Tenth mo. 31.—Of pardon. 1 Kings 8: 47-50.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 1.—Of peace. John 14: 25-31.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 2.—Of wisdom. Prov. 2: 1-8.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 3.—Of companionship. John 14: 18-21.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 4.—Of perfection. 2 Cor. 13: 9-10.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 5.—Of heaven. Rev. 22: 1-5.

There is nothing within the whole range of the world's literature more inviting than the "precious and exceeding great" promises that our God has made to us. Of the thousands that are given we may select one according to our mood or our sense of need, and with it for a starting point we can depict release from all our troubles and the realization of all our hopes.

Are we weary? "Come unto me and I will rest you." Does grief sadden? "He will wipe away all tears." "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." Do darkness and mystery oppress? "There shall be no night there."

Language is taxed in the effort to convey an idea of the delights of the Christian life and of the Christian's reward, and no poet's dream has transcended the assured realities that God has prepared for them that love Him. But they are not mere luxuries to be reveled in by anticipation and longed for with drifting fancy while our hands are idle. It was a reproach to the Hebrews that Ezekiel was to them "as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice," for they heard his words and did them not.

God's promises avail only him who comes to their level. The hand of faith must go out; the discipline of life must prepare the heart and develop the harvest. Then will the blessing be realized, and not sooner.

Forgiveness is promised, but only "if we confess our sins." Then how far beyond forgiveness the promise carries us! For He will also "cleanse from all unrighteousness." Among the proverbs of folly is this: "Be good and you will be lonesome," but the promise to those who seek righteousness is that "the Father and I will come and make Our abode with him." There is companionship to compensate for all the world's withholding.

Not here above, but in the "many mansions," the companionship continues, and there "we shall be like Him." Is that the crowning promise? That assurance we can as yet only anticipate in its perfection, but many may receive the mark "T. and P." that the old lady indorsed over one and another of the precious words as they, having been "tried and proved," really became a part of her inheritance.

What have we most precious tested? and which promise contains for us the most complete summing up of God's gracious purposes?

ANNUAL REPORT OF FRIENDS' MISSION AT MATEHUALA, MEXICO.

Dear Friends: It is with rejoicing and praise to God, and a desire to magnify what He has done through our humble labors during the year, that we beg to submit to you our usual Annual Report.

I. THE CHURCH WORK.

(1) We are now completing our tenth year since we have had charge of the entire work in this city. We intend to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the dedication of our church next December with appropriate exercises, that will impress upon the mind of our people the privileges of enjoying the use of a church building and the responsibility of maintaining its honor as truly a "house of God and a door of heaven." Services have been held regularly twice a week—Thursday evening prayer meeting and preaching service Sabbath evening. The last week in November a series of revival meetings were held under the leadership of a Methodist brother from a distant city, who was invited for the purpose, our congregation paying the expenses. The result was gratifying to us all, as the church experienced a real revival and a number were added to our membership. The number of present members is 41. Of these 24 have been received during the year and 14 of them during the series of revival meetings referred to above. Some of our old members are absent, but we endeavor to keep track of them by correspondence. The majority of them are faithful in attending services, and doing their part of the work of the Church. The average attendance at our services through the year has been 39, while the total number of people attending is 215. The number of adherents is estimated at 120. But we can see that our sphere of influence has been growing steadily, and there is a good outlook for our church work in the years to come. The collections in the church have amounted to $85.21 and the expenses to $70.02. Besides having helped the poor and sick to the amount of $6. The number of pastoral visits made is 173. The number of tracts and papers distributed 33,168 pages. While the attendance is not large, we often see with joy that new people come to the Sabbath evening service.

(2) The Sabbath school has been held regularly with a number of sessions for the year of 52; number of teachers and classes, 3; number of scholars enrolled, 32; average attendance, 30. Collections, $24.33, and expenses, $16.28. Owing to the prevailing custom of Sabbath work, it is very hard to get the people to come to Sabbath school, but a special effort is being made to bring all the children of our day school under the influence of the Sabbath school.

(3) The Christian Endeavor Society has 28 members, both active and associate, and of these 4 have been received into church membership. Number of meetings held, 52; average attendance, 14. Collections in the year, $24.05, and expenses, $20.17. This year the society is endeavoring to raise money to help to support a Bible reader that is very much needed in this city to do house-to-house work. We are hoping that some one may be found to do this important work. Thrice the Christian Endeavor Society has presented in the course of the year very interesting temperance programs, in which a number of the members have participated and in which the pledge of abstinence has always been offered with a cordial invitation to sign it. The number of people who have signed it is nearly 70, including some who are not regular members at our services.

II. THE DAY SCHOOL.

The number of children enrolled this year is 34, 12 girls and 22 boys. The average attendance is 28. We were able to secure a competent teacher in First month, who is doing very good work in the three grades, into which the school is divided, but our work is more thorough and more practical. The amount of money received from parents and other donations is $54.45, of which we have paid out $53.43 for a new set of maps, kindergarten and supplies, as ink, chalk, paper, etc., for the work of the year. We have been trying to educate our people to the duty of contributing for the educational work of our mission, and although there are many difficulties in the way, we can see that our efforts are not all in vain. There is the prospect of having at the end of the year excellent examinations and a program of closing exercises that will do credit to the school.

III. THE WORK IN LA PAZ.

About a year ago we rented a large and more centrally located room for our school and services, both having been kept up to the present time. The number of children enrolled this year is 18, and the average attendance is 14. This is a smaller number than last year, but we have had to meet opposition on the one hand and indifference on the part of the parents on the other. As a mining place, drunkenness and other fruits of the flesh are prominent and in constant opposition to the work of the Spirit. However, the school has continued its good and quiet work, giving emphasis to the Gospel and temperance principles. No interruption has occurred in our services, which are held every Tuesday evening; for when I have not been able to be present, the brethren take charge and meet together for worship. The average attendance is 20, but we often have a large congregation, though most of them stand in the street listening throughout the services. Some of the believers here have been received as members in our Matehuala church. I have been present and have preached at 40 meetings in the year, besides doing pastoral work and distributing 5,000 pages of literature. The outlook is as good as could be desired, but it is slow and hard work. I am well acquainted with a number of people there and we have not suffered any trouble whatever.

IV. THE PUBLISHING WORK.

In addition to all the above work, I have continued the publication of our Protestant paper, El Católico Convertido, now in its tenth year, and which is issued twice a month, and has a circulation of 1,000 copies. The number of pages for the year is 192,000. I am encouraged in this work by the testimonials received telling of the usefulness of the paper, as in many isolated places it is the only message of truth that reaches willing hearts. Though we have always tried to be as economical as possible in doing the work, still the expenses are above the receipts, and we would very much appreciate any help which kind friends would be willing to give us to continue this important work.

V. GOSPEL TRIPS.

I have been permitted during the year to visit the following places in the interests of the Gospel: Cedral, 7; Catorce, 2, in our field. As president of the Christian Endeavor Union for Mexico, the following places have been visited: Mexico City, Chihuahua, Torreon, Gomez Palacio, Saltillo, Aguascalientes and San Luis Potosi in the interests of the Christian Endeavor work. The aggregate number of miles traveled is estimated at over 4,000. In this connection it may also be said that I am editor-in-chief of El Esforzador Mexicano, the organ of the Christian Endeavor work in Mexico.

We thank God for the health and strength that have been our privilege to enjoy, and also for the joy of working for Him with all our powers and gifts. We realize that in the midst of so much work it is sweet to walk with God and to rest assured that He loves us tenderly and bears with our imperfections.

Matehuala, Mexico, October 10, 1904.

Educational.

EARLHAM COLLEGE.

Earlham College opened Ninth month 26th, with the largest college enrollment in its history. The increased attendance has not only been in students residing in the dormitories, but the student body from the city of Richmond has been strongly reinforced, making an increase of about thirty over last year. Each department has its full share of new students. The regular dormitory was filled to overflowing, and a new dormitory was arranged for by fitting up a large residence near the college campus and this building is full.

With the opening of the college year two new departments are added to the curriculum. Dr. Edwin D. Starbuck comes from Leland Stanford Jr. University to organize the new department of education, and Elsie Marshall, of Lewis and Drexel Institutes, is establishing a department of household economics. Over forty students have enrolled for this work. Systematic physical culture for both men and women is being offered this year.

On account of the increased attendance and consequently the added pressure of class work, four new instructors have been added to the regular college faculty.

PENN COLLEGE.

According to the provisions of the will of the late James Callanan, of Des Moines, Penn College will receive $10,000, with the understanding that the college shall pay $200 per year for the support of the Biblical department so long as Dr. W. L. Pearson is in charge. The entire gift is the fruit of Dr. Pearson's efforts, who on several occasions discussed the needs of the college with the venerable philanthropist. In this connection it is due Dr. Pearson to add that he has been instrumental in securing for the college various valuable endowments, notably $10,000 to found the Philadelphia and London Professorship of English Literature.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

George and Isabella De Vol reached San Francisco the 3d inst., enroute from China to Ohio.

B. H. Hutchins, who has been visiting in the West for some time, is now doing pastoral work at Kennard, Ind.

Elmer D. Gildersleeve was at the Peace Conference in Boston and attended Friends' meeting in Wooster, Mass.

A prayer meeting has been opened at Hartland Ridge, N. Y., to be held each Fourth-day evening. Some not Friends are interested.

Gervas A. Carey and wife are located at Onaway, Mich. This is the most northerly point where Friends meet in Michigan.

Herbert T. Cash began pastoral work in the meeting at Newberg, Ore., the first of last month, and is giving good satisfaction.

David Little has removed to Clinton Corners, N. Y., from Poughkeepsie. His health does not permit active work in the ministry.

Caleb J. Jenkins has assumed his duties as pastor in the Friends' meeting at San Francisco. His address is 3518 Sixteenth street.

At Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held at Hartland, N. Y., 4th to 6th inst., there were ten ministers present and it was a favored time.

Bennie Alberson, of Haviland, and Lindon Swafford, of Cavin, Kan., held a very interesting two-day meeting at Antioch, Kan., in Eighth month last.

Josiah Pennington, a minister, who has resided at Traverse City, Mich., for the past ten or twelve years, has been called to the meeting at Ypsilanti, Mich.

The meeting house at Farmington is being put in fine order and repainted, the parsonage enlarged and thoroughly renovated. Edwin P. Wood, a former pastor, visited the neighborhood recently.

At a Christian Endeavor meeting of the young people at Earlham, Iowa, the 9th inst., $120 was raised for the mission work in Jamaica. Charles S. White is doing good work as pastor in the meeting.

Robert L. Simkin, of Union Theological Seminary, a young Friend preparing for work in the foreign field, is assisting the pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Scarborough-on-Hudson. He attended Western Yearly Meeting.

Tennyson Lewis will remain another year in pastoral work with Friends at Wabash, Ind. He has been in the meeting two years. The year is commencing very nicely, considering the great shock from a small-pox scare which almost broke up the meeting for a time.

Emeline H. Tuttle, formerly of Woonsocket, R. I., after visiting relatives in Iowa, and visiting some of the meetings in the vicinity of Oskaloosa and Marshalltown, and attending Iowa and Kansas Yearly Meetings, went to Indianapolis, Ind., where she expects to make her home in the future.

Amos M. Kenworthy is building a new residence in Newberg, Ore. He desires to make his home there and work principally in the meetings of the surrounding country. His presence and help, together with that of his wife, will be much appreciated by Friends there. Two of his grandsons have entered Pacific College.

Oakwood Seminary, situated at Union Springs, N. Y., has a good number of students. The opening promises well in religious interest. One of the State Regent examiners is so pleased with the school that he is sending his daughter there, and another student attends because of his recommendation.

Thomas Raeburn White addressed a tea meeting at Twelfth Street Meeting House, in Philadelphia, Tenth month 17th, on the subject, "Quakerism in the Middle West." He sketched the great migration from the Southern States to the northwest territory and described the influences which tended to shape the development of Quakerism in those regions.

George and Jennie Hiks are nicely settled at Collins, N. Y., as pastors. They have planned to hold evangelistic meetings following the Christian Endeavor service each First-day evening, also prayer meetings at their home upon Fifth-day evenings. The Bible school has doubled since they came. A sewing circle and Junior Endeavor Society will soon be organized.

The Roll-Call Meeting, held by Traverse City Monthly Meeting, Michigan, the 13th inst., was a unique service. Over one hundred persons were present, and many responded heartily to their name. Some who could not attend sent letters of remembrance. A history of the meeting was read. After the program an enjoyable reception was given to Edgar Requa and family.

Edgar L. Requa is now located in the Friends' Meeting at Traverse City, Mich. He and his family occupy the minister's home, a comfortable dwelling built a year and a half ago. His preaching is already attracting many outsiders. His first sermon on "The Church the Preacher's Force; the World the People's Field," text, John 17: 18, was favorably reported in a leading daily the next day.

Chapel Monthly Meeting of Friends, held near Tama, Ohio, the 15th inst., was greatly favored by the presence and labors of J. Robert Parker, of High Point, N. C., and Thomas W. Inman, of Carthage, Ind. God honored the service and blessed it to the good or all. The visiting ministers together attended all the meetings comprised in the Monthly Meeting. J. Robert Parker has visited in the love of the Gospel all the meetings in Vanwert Quarter.

Pacific College held its formal opening, Second-day evening, the 3d inst., but the regular work began the previous week. Professors Wright, Lawrence and Partington, of the departments of History, Science and English, respectively, were members of the Class of 1904 at Earlham College. With the exception of Professor Kantner and wife in charge of the department of music, the remainder of the professors have held their positions for some years. The year opened very propitiously.

There has been a wonderful religious awakening at Friends' Blue Ridge Mission, Virginia, the result of a two weeks' series of meetings conducted by the superintendent, David E. Sampson, and L. J. and Anna Rugg, of Mt. Airy. Over forty professed to be definitely blessed. Some of these had gone far in the paths of sin, but are now rejoicing in a Saviour's love. The new converts are full of zeal and the revival still continues to spread. The people showed their appreciation of David Sampson, by responding heartily to his last call. They also contributed liberally to the support of the workers whom he left in charge of the meeting. The new teachers, Sibyl Stanley and Hannah Rakestraw, from Lupton, Mich., were present and assisted in the meetings.

A report from Professor John Howard, principal of Stella Academy, Oklahoma, states that fifty-seven students have enrolled for the year. The many improvements are almost completed. A new furnace has been put in, the audience room enlarged and the library and museum have been moved into a new room. A new piano has been purchased and other improvements made. At a recent Sabbath evening service seven students were at the altar seeking forgiveness. There is a demand for small tracts of land near the academy, where Friends can erect homes and send their children to school. With the end in view of making a school settlement, the farm upon which the academy is situated has been laid out into small tracts of five or ten acres. A plot of the same will soon be sent to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for publication. Visiting Friends are always welcome at the academy.

A report from J. Lindley Spicer, superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work in New York Yearly Meeting, gives the following disposition of their ministers. They may be divided into four divisions, viz.: (1) Pastors, (2) Acting Pastors, (3) Resident Ministers, (4) Non-Resident Ministers:

(1) Pastors.—Those who give most of their time, and are partially supported: Amos Sanders, 261 Green avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Edwin P. Wood, Yorktown Heights, N. Y.; Willard O. Trueblood, 6 Virginia avenue, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Walter H. Commons, Clintondale, N. Y.; J. Edward Ransome, Tillson, N. Y.; Alfred Cornell, Highland Mills, N. Y.; Elizabeth G. Underhill, Cornwall Landing, N. Y.; James Renfrew, Monkton Ridge, Vt.; Abijah J. Weaver, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Samuel H. Hodges, South Glens Falls, N. Y.; Emma Hodges, South Glens Falls, N. Y.; J. William Peekham, Upperville, N. Y.; J. Lee Sutherland, Morris, N. Y.; Nelly T. Roberts, Perry City, N. Y.; Fred L. Ryon, Poplar Ridge, N. Y.; Olive A. Ryon, Poplar Ridge, N. Y.; Hannah H. Leggett, Batavia, N. Y., R. F. D., 1; Annie Sands Leggett, Batavia, N. Y., R. F. D., 1; George B. Evans, Mandon, N. Y.; George M. Hicks, Collins, N. Y.; Jennie Hicks, Collins, N. Y.; John D. Piper, Elba, N. Y.

(2) Acting Pastors.—Some of these are resident ministers who are doing the work of pastors, some have very small contributions toward their support: Sarah A. Haydock, 501 West One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, New York City; Anna K. Knight, 347 West One Hundred and Sixteenth street, New York City; Mary M. Post, Westbury Station, N. Y.; Mary S. Kimber, 229 West Thirtieth street, New York City; Richard S. Collins, Purchase, N. Y.; James Wood, Mt. Kisco, N. Y.; Wilson M. Page, Chappaqua, N. Y.; Richard F. Carr, Chappaqua, N. Y.; Rhoda A. Swift, Millbrook, N. Y.; A. F. Swift, Millbrook, N. Y.; Henry H. Swift, Millbrook, N. Y.; Samuel Birdsall, Leptondale, N. Y.; Martha H. Bell, Milton, N. Y.; William M. Palmer, Ferrisburg, Vt.; Edwin J. Meader, Bristol, Vt.; Chauncey B. Thorne, Skaneateles, N. Y.; George Hull, Gasport, N. Y.; Mary S. Knowles, Union Springs, N. Y.

(3) Resident Ministers.—Those who attend and assist as way opens: William P. Hastings, West New Brighton, N. Y.; Mary K. Murray, Flushing, N. Y.; J. Lindley Spicer, 29 Cherry street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Benedict J. Carpenter, White Plains, N. Y.; Elmer D. Gildersleeve, 314 Main street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Mary Moore, Academy street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Abbie F. Cartland, Academy street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Elias G. Minard, Franklin street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; William H. Stone, Vails Gate, N. Y.; Emily E. Peekham, Bangall, N. Y.; David Little, Clinton Corners, N. Y.; William Thos. Willis, Clintondale, N. Y.; Emilie U. Burgess, Highland, N. Y.; Samuel Miles, Monkton Ridge, Vt.; Mary Hoag, Keeseville, N. Y.; Mary A. Haviland, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Thomas C. Sprague, Sidney, N. Y.; Rachel M. Sprague, Sidney, N. Y.; Joshua L. Carpenter, Cortland, N. Y.; Warren Gardner, 119 South Division street, Auburn, N. Y.; Mina L. Harkness, Elba, N. Y.; Mary J. Weaver, Batavia, N. Y.; Alexander M. Purdy, Palmyra, N. Y.

(4) Non-Resident Ministers.—Some attend our meetings from time to time, others are active in work where they live and retain membership with us. Others are removed from all meetings of Friends: James C. Adams, 142 Wake-man avenue, Newark, N. J.; Eleanor C. Birdsall, Westfield, N. J.; Margaret A. Holme, Luh Hoh, China, Missionary; Seneca H. Stevens, Richmond, Va.; Lindley M. Stevens, 257 Cedar avenue, Cleveland, Ohio; David Barton, 616 Wellington street, Montreal, Canada; William L. Dean, Harrisburgh, Va.

SUMMARY.

Twenty-two pastors care for twenty-three meetings among Friends and nine mission or outpost meetings.

Nineteen acting pastors care for thirteen meetings, work in missions, prayer meetings, etc.

Twenty-three resident ministers assist in two meetings not mentioned above and in some of the meetings where pastors are located. Some reside far removed from Friends' meetings. Others are engaged in business to the exclusion of the exercise of their gift.

Seven non-resident ministers.

Seventy ministers in all: one caring for two meetings, fifteen not yet recorded, seven meetings unsupplied. There are forty-five meetings for worship. There are fourteen missions or outside meetings.

Events and Comments.

The government and most of the private reports indicate a cotton yield this year of over 11,000,000 bales.

Congress at the coming session will be asked to appropriate $183,748,500 for the postal service for the next fiscal year. This is an advance of nearly 8 per cent. over the last annual postal appropriation. Receipts of course are rising also, but the free rural delivery service appears to be extending too rapidly to enable income to keep pace with expenditure.

Financial circles are interested in the fact that the syndicate of American bankers secured the $40,000,000 bonds of the Mexican government. The loan was awarded in competition with a syndicate of French bankers, composed of the leading French banks and financiers, and New York's financial district took a lively interest in the outcome. It will be recalled that American bankers have financed the needs of Cuba, and will now occupy the same relation to Mexico.

Secretary Taft and such associates as he may choose for counsel and help have been commissioned to go to Panama and adjust relations between that government and the Canal Commission. The representatives of Panama are highly pleased with the action. They believe that they could have had no fairer treatment and could have no better arbiter of the questions in dispute than the Secretary of War, who has shown in his administration of the government of the Philippines his broad-minded estimate of the rights of the dependencies.

The Torrey revivals in Great Britain appear to be very popular. The recent meetings in Bolton were crowded to the doors and fruitful in many conversions. Large companies from Manchester, where Dr. Torrey held services last Eleventh month, came to Bolton to help on the work; and these testified to the value and permanency of the work accomplished in that city. One Sabbath evening the crowd desiring entrance was so great that the sidewalk was blocked for half a mile from the door of the tabernacle before entrance could be given. The ministers of Bolton appear to have entered heartily into the work of the American evangelists.

The constitutionality of the treasury payments for the Panama Canal under the Spooner act will be argued in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a few days hence. An Illinois lawyer, Warren B. Wilson, of Hinsdale, started the suit, and what interests are behind him no one seems to know. The chief legal basis of the suit appears to be in the fact that the Spooner act authorized the President to negotiate with Colombia and build the canal under the rights obtained from that country. The President, as is well known, wrote in Panama, a different country, for Colombia. Secretary Shaw is the nominal defendant. The case will doubtless be appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

During Ninth month only twenty-six bushels of wheat were exported from the whole Atlantic seaboard, and only 222,433 bushels for the whole country, the Pacific coast contributing most of these shipments. This practical disappearance of wheat from the export trade, where it has heretofore figured prominently for several decades, is a remarkable development, about whose permanency the grain trade hold varying opinions. That special causes are operating, however, can hardly be denied—such as American crop shortage and exceptionally large production in Argentina, India and Australia. But it is probable that the United States hereafter will not figure in supplying wheat to western Europe to the extent heretofore maintained.

After three years of patient research, two professors of Geneva, Switzerland, have discovered a new anesthetic which promises to revolutionize dental practice. In reporting this to the State Department Consul Liefeld, at Freiburg, Germany, states that, finding that the nervous system was influenced by colored light, the professors soon perceived, after experimenting with each hue, that blue had an extraordinary soothing effect on the nerves. The consul says that a tooth may be painlessly extracted, with none of the after effects on the system, by shutting up the patient in a dark room and exposing his eyes to a blue light of 16-candlepower for three minutes, causing him to lose all sense of pain, although at the same time retaining his senses.

The most sanguinary battle of the Russian-Japanese war, yet fought, occurred the 10th to the 17th inst. The forces on both sides numbered together at least half a million men. The Russians were aggressive in the opening days of the contest. It is supposed that the rumors of discontent at home among the reserves and the dire peril of Port Arthur's garrison and the absolute necessity of a Russian victory, in order to avoid a crisis at home, led the Czar to order Kuropatkin to advance south. The result was the terrible battle of Shakhe River. Both armies were unable to make a permanent advance and both held their ground until their opponents were forced to cease operations from sheer exhaustion. It is generally conceded to be a Japanese victory, since the Russian's advance was checked and Kuropatkin has withdrawn his army northward toward Mukden.

The settlement of the differences between the employers and employees of the Sheet Metal Workers of Philadelphia introduces a new, hopeful feature in the strike question. Both sides have signed a perpetual agreement to submit grievances, which cannot be otherwise adjusted, to arbitration. The perpetual feature is the encouraging thing about the affair. Many other bodies of like character have agreed to use arbitration for a number of years, but this new departure gives a permanency to this method of adjudication which cannot help but promote confidence and good-will on both sides. In speaking of the matter one exchange says: "Though the men have obtained an increase in wages, a half Saturday holiday in the summer months and a guarantee that only union men shall be employed, the employers have gained the great advantage of immunity from all labor troubles in the future."

The week of prayer for the Y. M. C. A. will occur this year, Eleventh month 13th to 19th. The topics proposed for the several days are as follows: First-day, the 13th, The World-wide Work, The World's Committee and Workers, The Coming Jubilee of the World's Alliance, The Church of Christ in all Lands; Second-day, the 14th, The Forward Evangelistic Movement in the Young Men's Christian Association, The United States and Canada; Third-day, the 15th, The Student Work, The Foreign Mission Department, South America, Cuba; Fourth-day, the 16th, The Educational Work, The Physical Work, Work for Boys, Europe; Fifth-day, the 17th, The Work Among Railroad Men, Work with Soldiers and Sailors, Work Among the Industrial Classes, Asia; Sixth-day, the 18th, The Religious Work, Bible Study, Social Agencies, Africa; Seventh-day, the 19th, Employed Officers, The Training Schools, Building Enterprises, Finances, Oceanica.

From the Twenty-third Annual Report of Booker T. Washington, principal of Tuskegee Normal and Industrial School, we find that $213,302.43 was received for all purposes, except additions to the permanent plant. For the permanent plant improvements, which have been mainly the erection of buildings and purchasing of land, $93,852.14 was received. Since the last report there has been added to the endowment fund $15,587.50, making a total amount invested of $1,030,553.28. Every reasonable effort has been made during the year to confine the operations of the school within its income, but these have not been wholly successful. At least 1,200 students have been refused admission this year, and it is the plan not to increase the number to be admitted next year, but to attempt still further

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

SOMETIME, SOMEWHERE.

Unanswered yet, the prayer your lips have pleaded

In agony of heart these many years? Does faith begin to fail, is hope departing,

And think you all in vain those failing years?

Say not the Father hath not heard your prayer—

You shall have your desire—sometime—somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Though when you first presented

This one petition at the Father's throne

It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,

So urgent was your heart to make it known;

Though years have passed since then, do not despair—

The Lord will answer you—sometime—somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Nay, do not say ungranted.

Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done.

The work began when first your prayer was uttered

And God will finish what He has begun.

If you will keep the incense burning there

His glory you shall heed—sometime—somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith can not be unanswered.

Her feet were firmly planted on the rock.

Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,

Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.

She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,

And cries: "It shall be done—sometime—somewhere!"

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purposes.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but only absorbs the gases and impurities that are present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets"

Talk about the questions of time; there is but one question—how to bring the truths of God's Word into vital contact with the minds and hearts of all classes of people.—William E. Gladstone.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

GOD'S SERVING ANGELS.

'Tis written that the serving angels stand
Beside God's throne, ten myriads on each hand,
Waiting, with wings outstretched and watchful eyes,
To do their Master's heavenly embassies.
Quicker than thought His high commands they read,
Swifter than light to execute them speed,
Bearing the word of power from star to star
Some hither and some thither, near and far.
And unto these naught is too high or low,
Too mean or mighty, if He wills it so;
Neither is any creature, great or small,
Beyond His pity, which embraceth all Because His eye beholdeth all which are,
Sees without search, and counteth without care;
Nor lies the babe nearer the nursing place
Than Allah's smallest child to Allah's grace;
Nor any ocean rolls so vast that he Forgets one wave of all that restless sea.

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

SOCIAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD

Studies in Human and Divine Inter-Relationship

BY

RUFUS M. JONES, A. M., Litt. D.

PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN HAVERFORD COLLEGE

This is a fresh interpretation of the deepest problems of life. It is a book for the times, and will come to many as a message of help. The author turns to the service of religion the great gains which have been won by recent investigations in psychology. He tells in straightforward and untechnical language what it means to be a person. He points out that to be a person one must be bound up in organic relation with many persons, and step by step he reaches the discovery that this social relationship stretches from earth to heaven—that God and man are also bound together in organic relationship. He shows how the search for God reveals this. How the great mystics have realized it, how the movement of Quakerism illustrates it, how both Faith and Reason unite to proclaim it, and finally how the New Testament confirms this central idea of the Divine-Human life. The book is full of optimism and good cheer, and it will help the seeker to find the path home. It contains the following chapters:

Introduction; The Quest; The Meaning of Personality; The Realization of Persons; Self-Sacrifice; The Subconscious Life; The Testimony of Mysticism; The Inner Light; The Test of Spiritual Guidance; Faith as a Pathway to Reality; The Self and the Over-Self; The Divine-Human Life.

HIS RAIMENT.

BY LINDLEY M. STEVENS.

"They took the robe off from him, and put His own raiment on him."

"They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots."

Was the prophecy only outsingled
For the men who the cross did uprear,
Who the wine and the myrrh had commingled,
And the one who did thrust with the spear?

For the word that the prophet hath spoken Hath to me a fulfillment within;
And to me it doth stand for a token
That revealeth and hideth my sin.

With the garment of Praise, never clouded,
With the sandals of Peace was He sent;
With the Spirit and Truth was He shrouded;
With the vesture of Love, never rent.

So the Angel, that slumbereth never
As he holdeth the balance and hilt,
Ere he speak and doth banish forever,
On account of the sin and the guilt,

Heareth Mercy, for sin making payment,
Stays his word with the voice of the Slain:
"Lo, among them they parted my raiment,
And my vesture shall cover their stain."

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

VICARIOUSNESS.

THERE HAS BEEN a tendency in these modern days on the part of many persons to take everything of a vicarious nature away from the atonement. We hear much of the fact that God loves us all—saints and sinners; but we hear little of the corresponding fact that "He who knew no sin became sin for us." In a word, the fact of sin has grown weak, and a rose-water theory of life has with many replaced the sterner theory which put sin in the foreground of the conception of man.

But this easy, rose-water theory is untrue, and a method of redemption which ignores the need of vicarious sacrifice is as imperfect as a theory of vision would be which left out the sensitive retina. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission," may be an ancient Hebrew statement. It may mean one thing in one age and something different in another, but it expresses an eternal truth, a truth as universal as life and as deep as life.

What makes life vicarious? This: We are so completely bound up together that there is no possibility of being a person at all without sharing life with others. We are organic with other persons, and what they are affects us. Nobody can sin in a sin-tight compartment. The sinner will sooner or later suffer for his sin. But that is not all. Many innocent persons will suffer for it, too. Those who are nearest and closest will very likely suffer most, but that sin has endless possibilities for causing suffering even upon those far remote in space and in time. What one of us can stop the havoc of his sins even after he himself has repented of them and been forgiven? So long as human life remains organic the innocent must suffer with the sinner.

But that is only one side of life. Holiness also involves a like suffering. There are no holiness-tight compartments, either. No man can be holy to himself. Just so far as he has any rag of holiness, he must share it—he must feel a burden for other lives—he must try to make somebody else holy. But that costs something. You cannot command or compel people into holiness, you cannot increase their spiritual stature one cubit by any kind of force or compulsion. You can do it only by sharing your life with them, by making them feel your goodness, by your love and sacrifice for them. When a martyr dies for some truth, men suddenly discover for the first time how much it is worth and they eagerly pursue it over all obstacles. In spiritual things we always make our appeal to the cost of the truth or the principle. Think of the blood which has been shed for freedom of conscience! Remember what a price our forefathers paid in their own blood for the principle of democracy! Thus we speak of all the privileges of life. They are ours because somebody has felt that they were worth the cost, because somebody has died that we might freely have them. It is the tragedy of human life that we must suffer through the sin of others, and that we must suffer also if we would carry goodness or holiness into other lives. Every bit of goodness which ever prevails anywhere in this world has cost somebody something.

But we cannot stop in the human circle. This organic character of life does not end with man. It goes clear up to the top of that spiritual ladder which Jacob saw in his dream. Christ has forever revealed to us that God's life is bound up with our human lives as vine with branch, as body with member. We are so organic that the Divine Judge says that no one can give a cup of cold water to the least person in the world without giving it to Him! Well, then, every sin makes the heart of Infinite Innocence and Holiness suffer. Does the wayward boy's sin produce anguish in the heart of his innocent praying mother and yet leave the heart of the Divine Father untouched? The cross is the answer.

But not only is there a vicarious suffering from the sheer fact of sin, there can also be no sharing of Divine holiness with man except at a cost. Man can rise toward Divine goodness only as he is drawn by the sight of some real manifestation of the way in which God loves him, and the way in which God shows the worth of holiness and goodness. Christ, living and dying, is the revelation of the worth of holiness and the cost of bringing man up to it. This idea is always present with Paul. "You are not your own; you are bought with a price." "We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us." "The life I now live in the flesh, I live in faith, the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me."

MAKING CRIME BY REPORTING IT.

ALMOST everything in human life is more or less contagious. Even the more sane and solid of us are unconsciously affected by what others do. And before we know it we often find ourselves doing something because we have seen somebody else do it.

Now society is not composed of just sane and solid persons. There are all about us persons who are weak in power of resistance. They easily respond to suggestion. They are in "hair-trigger" condition and go off at a slight touch. If somebody does a strange, odd thing it makes them want to try it. Some of us have seen a wave of hysterics go through a boarding school. The mere presence of a "case" is dangerous, for it is "catching" through suggestion. If a delicate child is thrown with a morbid person, the child will soon grow morbid, because such things spread by suggestion.

Now our newspapers, or at least many of them, devote much of their space to sensational reports of crime. Many of us are revolted by the incidents. They make us loathe such things. But the effect on another class of our population is totally different. Morbid persons and those who have weak control of the imagination feel a strange and almost insane fascination to imitate the deed they read about. It is noticeable that odd crimes get quickly repeated and go in waves, just through this power of suggestion. It is the old story of telling the little children that they may do anything else, only not play with matches, which generally results in a fire if the match box can be found!

The awfully solemn fact is that our sensational press is constantly giving suggestions for crime. It may give fine editorials on pure ideals on one page. It gives the spark in its news reports which is sure to set some poor "hair-trigger" man or woman, with slight resisting power, off to repeat the crime anew. We shall some day learn to guard society from this soul poison by treating the report of details of flagrant crime as almost as serious as the crime itself.

But it is not only newspapers which are at fault. Some Christian ministers run very near the danger line. In their zeal to hasten reforms they use sensational methods which produce a crop of disorders which they themselves hardly suspect. He who would deal with evil wisely must learn to govern his words and to speak with care and moderation and to avoid sensation as he would the evil one.

We are being made aware every day of the horrors of social vice. It is surely bad enough and the battle against it must be fierce and long. But above everything let us guard our innocent boys and girls from hearing sensational details of this vice or from reading books which picture man's depravity. Let us impress them with the beauty of stainless life, let us show them the happiness of pure homes and let them not think of the world as a place where the black tent of vice is pitched on every hilltop and in every valley. Where the sensational method will safeguard one it will unship and endanger two and it is not a weapon for the white and holy service of God and the little ones.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

EDWARD GRUBB has written a valuable letter to the London Times on the penal system in America. He points out that in many American cities there are separate courts for children, so that they do not come in contact with dissolute and hardened characters. Secondly, that there are paid officers—generally women—attached to these juvenile courts to whose care the youthful offender may be entrusted, if the court sees fit.

When the offender is dismissed on probation, the woman who has charge of him makes a full inquiry into his history and surroundings. She has authority to visit him at any time. She keeps track of his progress in school, and takes what means she can to help him gain, or regain, steady habits and trustworthy character.

We print in another column an editorial article from the London Times upon this "probation system" or "parole system," as it is often called. Many Friends are deeply interested in penal reforms, and they will welcome such a discussion as this in the Times. The way to form public sentiment is to get good views printed in the newspapers. Sooner or later the newspaper begins to adopt them

WE REJOICE over the windfall which has come to Penn. College. Ten thousand dollars does not seem much to great wealthy universities; to a young college, just clear of a heavy burden of debt, it is very much, and it will give needed encouragement and spirit, which are as important for good work as dollars and cents are. We are glad, too, that the donor provided for helping the Biblical department.

THE DECISION of Great Britain and Russia to refer to The Hague court their dispute over the shooting of English fishermen in the North Sea by the guns of the Russian fleet is far and away the greatest triumph for peace which has yet come since the court was established. The situation was extremely serious and at that high tension a war, with awful consequences, might easily have been precipitated.

The incident is a splendid illustration of the advantages of having a court ready for such a sudden emergency. The part of the Russian fleet concerned in the shooting will simply halt until the court renders the decision. What a blessing it would have been if such a court had existed when the "Maine" blew up in Havana harbor.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A MESSAGE FROM THE FAR EAST TO THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA.

BY GILBERT BOWLES.

Though the great ocean separates us, we feel deeply here in the Sunrise Kingdom all of the movements which affect the life of the Society of Friends in the homeland. Looking back upon the Society from afar is like viewing a landscape from some mountain peak, little differences of color and elevation being merged into one general impression. Distance and time may somewhat loosen the attachment to particular localities and meetings, leaving the heart free to be strongly moved by the general spirit with which great opportunities and crises are met.

Passing by the many things of intense interest, I hasten at once to state that the message which burns most continuously in my heart is concerning the academies which, through prayer and sacrifice, have in past years been given to the Society of Friends in America.

Ever since the founding of an academy on the prairies of Kansas gave to me a new vision of life, I have had an abiding interest in these institutions—these daughters of the Christian church. My interest has deepened year by year, although for ten years I have had no direct connection with any particular academy. Ever since coming to Japan, and even before, a message has been in my heart for the Friends at home; though in the midst of pressing duties it has never before shaped itself into words. Even now I have neither the time nor the data for the kind of an article which I should like to write. I trust some who can gather the material may be led to give an authoritative message on the subject.

I have rejoiced greatly to hear from time to time that financial aid has come—or rather has been brought—to some of our colleges, lifting debts and helping them in their struggle for endowment funds, without which few private Christian schools or colleges can long maintain their standing. This joy was intensified by the news that at last Yearly Meeting time the friends of my own alma mater had come to her aid in an hour of need. Let the good work go on.

In the same spirit let the Society of Friends nurture and care for her academies which are yet alive. There is demanded for this the same prayer, the same determination and the same sacrifice which have been blessed toward the saving of the colleges. To move the friends of the academies to this, there is needed the same conviction of their worth as they felt in reference to the colleges. If anyone would be stirred not only to help save our academies, but to equip them for the best service, let him but ponder what these institutions do when they have the opportunity. I can here do little more than enumerate some of the reasons why all lovers of Christ and humanity should rally to the support of our academies. I say our, for I feel as if I had some life interest in every one of them.

Necessary, if the Society would Control the Education of its Children.—Having already largely given up the primary and intermediate instruction of her children to the State, the Society cannot afford to give up her academies, thus losing her precious opportunity for another four years of stamping with her ideals her own sons and daughters.

Feeders of Friends' Colleges.—The teachers in the academies being mostly graduates of Friends' colleges, the stream of young life in the students flows back toward the college as naturally as the waters in a channeled river-bed flow into the sea. On the other hand, as long as a student is in the public schools the natural tendency is toward the State institutions. The Friends' colleges can never do their best work if the academies should cease to send their graduates, who are generally well disciplined for work and ready to receive the highest ideals which the college has to give.

Distribute and Utilize College Graduates.—Each academy by calling as teachers one or more college graduates, thus aids in a more even distribution and in a wider use of the members of the college community.

Bring New Visions of Life to Many Who can Never Go on to Higher Educational Institutions.—The hands of the academy teachers push back the gates leading to the great fields of knowledge and investigation. This has brought an essential awakening of the intellectual life to many young people who have been denied the privilege of college and university.

Better than High Schools.—Not better, always, in equipment and advancement in text-book work, but better as a school of conduct and character, and a place for the development of individual power; better as a feeder of the colleges; better for the purposes of the Christian church. The high school is doing a great work, but there are many reasons why it can never do the work which distinctly belongs to the Christian academy.

Furnish the Best Opportunities for Personal Contact with Christian Teachers.—Trite is the saying of Garfield, that to sit on a log with Mark Hopkins was as good a university as he could wish. It would be hard to devise any educational institution in which the teacher could have a more splendid opportunity for personal contact with the student and a more powerful influence in the molding of individual character and destiny than in the academy. Every one who, with increasing thankfulness as the years go by, can look back to such a heart of friendship and such a hand of guidance will know what I mean.

Reach Young People in the Most Formative Period.—The period preceding college life is more critical and the soul more impressionable even than during the college course. A young life is more easily moved and molded by the Christian forces of a genuine Friends' academy than by the best college four years later. The spiritual force of the college may be stronger, but it has to deal with a life which for four more years has been rapidly crystallizing into fixed purposes and habits of thought, feeling, conduct and character.

Centers of Education and Culture in the Community.—With its library, its literary entertainments, lectures, its intelligent and helpful teachers and, above all, its contact with the homes through the young people, the academy has in many instances so awakened the community that middle-aged men have commenced courses of systematic reading, and some have picked up their long unused books and again entered the halls of learning.

Channels for the Best Religious Thought to Come to the Meeting.—A group of academy students has a powerful attraction for men with a message. This makes it possible to secure men and women who are capable of giving to public gatherings the best things in nature, literature and Christianity.

Centers for Soul Saving.—What a glad piece of news was that which came last winter, concerning a great spiritual awakening in one of the well-known Friends' boarding schools. Following a period of quiet intercessory prayer on the part of a few, there came to the student body such a hunger for God that the young soul-winners were kept busy far into the night praying with repentant ones, ending with a share of that glad joy of the angels over souls born into the kingdom of Christ. Perhaps some who read these lines may recall a scene at Northbranch (Kansas) Academy in the winter of 1901. In the solemn hush following the morning Bible reading of Professor Townsend, one young man, for whom many had prayed, fell on his knees and in a tender prayer gave his heart to God. Another, kneeling, followed with words of confession and a prayer for pardon. Christian students and teachers gave God thanks, and prayed for the Spirit to continue to move hearts. Silently kneeling in prayer, one after another the students followed each other, until every one in the school (though memory is not certain about one or two) had spoken unto God the deepest longings of the soul. Unconscious of the passing of the hours, a large part of the forenoon had stolen by when the teacher quietly turned to the work of the day, leaving all hearts to ponder this most impressive lesson on the reality of the living Christ working by His Holy Spirit to draw young lives unto Himself. Such times of conversion and soul-awakening have often come to many of our academies. They await ever only the right heart preparation.

Make Possible the Increase of Bible Knowledge with Intellectual Growth.—The academies have not come up to their highest possibilities in the teaching of the Bible, yet untold blessing has attended the morning Bible lessons at the opening of the day and other means which have served to impress upon the students the worth of the Bible and the reverence with which their teachers turn its pages. Where the Bible has not had its place as a part of the curriculum (the Bible ought to belong to the course of study in every Friends' academy), the teachers have often done their best work as teachers in the regular Bible schools connected with the meeting. In these and other ways Bible knowledge and spiritual growth have in many cases kept pace with the rapid development of the intellectual life. If this be not true, as is all too often the case where the church entrusts her sons and daughters to the State, there must inevitably come a weakening of the spiritual life, and such a readjustment of faith as will leave out that which is distinctly divine in its origin and soul-saving in its results.

Training Schools for Christian Workers.—Wherever young people are grouped together for study, and the Christians among them are united in organized work, there we have a natural and helpful school for Christian workers. Nearly all of the academies have their Christian Endeavor Societies or Christian Associations. The committee work, work for new students, caring for strangers, personal work in leading fellow-students to Christ, conducting Sabbath schools and meetings in the surrounding neighborhood,—these are schools for work which have given to the Society of Friends hundreds of her leaders in Christian work. Of course, much of this work is often done where there is no academy, but it may be more extensive and effective where there is such an institution, with teachers of that noble and spiritual type with which so many of the academies have been blessed. These same teachers are now usually trained in college Christian association work, and bring the spirit and methods of the best work for young people.

Awaken Permanent Interest in Moral Reforms.—Many young people have, while students in the academies, been awakened for life by the message of some true reformer. If the local meeting and the academy be in close co-operation there can be no better opportunity for enlisting workers, many of whom will become leaders in moral and social reforms. Here the influence of teachers, ministers and a body of mature Christians has the unchallenged right of way in determining the attitude of young lives toward the great moral problems of the day.

Aid the Cause of Missions.—Were I asked what can be done to increase and make permanent the interest in missions in the Society of Friends, I should answer that, aside from the quickening of the spiritual life of the membership, nothing better can be done than to insure the permanency and growth of our academies, and then utilize them in enlisting workers for the evangelization of the world. Geographical, historical and literary studies naturally speak a missionary message when interpreted by a Christian teacher. A mission study class in every Friends' academy—if carried on somebody's heart—would soon answer the call of many missionary boards for workers, and in a longer time would help replenish the mission treasuries. Recalling from memory the workers who have gone to the mission field from Iowa Yearly Meeting during the past five years, at least three-fourths of them have at one time been students in some Friends' academy.

Help to Hold the Young People to the Work of the Society of Friends.—In almost every academy there is a rare opportunity for the local Friends' meeting to place its heart close to the lives of the young people. If the principal and teachers be not leaders in turning the "heart of the fathers to the children and the heart of the children to the fathers" in the work of the Church, they are missing the best opportunity of their lives. Whether young people are to give their lives to rural pursuits, to business, to the professions or to more direct lines of Christian work, if they may but pass on to their life callings through a good Friends' academy, or similar institution, where teachers and leading members of the local meeting sympathetically lead the students into the real heart and life of the Society, their very habits of life and thought will be cast into the mold of the principles for which our branch of the Christian Church stands. Although the local meeting has not always had a heart sufficiently warm and spiritual to draw the young people whom God has placed within reach, yet many young lives have gone out from the academies strongly re-attached by conviction and habit to that which is eternal and abiding in our principles. It is suggestive to note the relatively large number of persons connected with Friends' educational institutions who have been students in the academies, and many of these would not be where they now are did not their convictions of truth and duty hold them against tempting positions with higher salaries. Perhaps we shall never know how much we owe, as a Society, to this class of men and women. According to President Rosenberger's Souvenir of Friends' Schools, seven out of nine of the presidents of Friends' colleges (in 1899) have been students of Friends' academies or boarding schools. So long as the Society of Friends has a mission in the world—and it is not yet approaching its completion—let her never give over the training of her own young people and of holding them to her ideals during the most impressionable and critical period of their lives.

When a struggling academy is seen on the prairies, where hot winds sometimes scorch the crops and send a tremor to the hearts of the farmers who have sacrificed so much for the little lighthouse in the community, one has no blame, but only thanksgiving for brave hearts which have wrought nobly. There ariseth the prayer that the same Father who has planted these trees whose leaves are for shade and healing, and whose fruit is for strength and growth, may preserve them from the axe of poverty. And may the hearts of those who have money be moved not only to save these academies from the auctioneer's block (a fate not unknown), but to bless them with gifts which will enable them to increase their power and usefulness.

But what shall we say of some struggling academies which look out over fields of waving grain, orchards of choicest fruits and pastures, which feed herds of short-horn cattle and blooded horses? There is needed in some such communities a revival of that same spirit which, with spiritual vision, laid the cornerstone of these institutions in prayerful purpose and sacrificial toil. Lack of endowments, combinations with public schools (better than entire surrender), witness more often to a lack of an appreciation of an academy than to poverty.

As an aid to the solution of the many problems which press upon our branch of the Church, as an opportunity for inculcating enduring principles, as a school for Christian service and as a practical force for the accomplishment of our mission in the world, we can do nothing more effective than to hold fast to our academies, relieve them of financial burdens and give them endowments sufficient to insure their perpetuity and growth.

Some months have passed since much of the above was written. Still the appeal for our academies and the exhortation to those who have power to help them burns within my heart. In the meantime the good news has come that the friends of Fairmount Academy have nobly rallied to the call for an endowment fund. What one community has done many others can do. The spiritual instinct which led the fathers and mothers to plant these academies in village, town and country did not lead them astray.

PENAL REFORMS IN AMERICA.

We print the second part of a communication by Edward Grubb, secretary to the Howard Association, with respect to some new developments of criminal law in America which he desires to see imitated here. It must not be assumed that in all respects the methods of the administration of criminal law in that country are better than our own. As to some matters the contrary is nearer the truth. For example, many of the American prisons are altogether inferior to ours; and the people of that country have much to learn from us as to the separation and classification of offenders and other matters. The points made by Edward Grubb would not be read with a due sense of proportion, if it were not recognized that England, which was a pioneer in this region, still keeps, as to some matters, well to the front of the movement, and that the Prison Commission, at all events in recent times, has been singularly receptive of new ideas and methods. In the whole domain of criminal law, there is going on, the world over, a veritable revolution. The fundamental conceptions are being subverted or shaken, with the result that novelties which the "classical school" of criminologists or reformers, such as Howard or Romilly or Mackintosh, could not have dreamt of are being introduced—changes for the most part dictated by a conviction that the State must prevent, as far as possible, crime in its inception as well as punish it when committed; changes which tend to withdraw young offenders from the range of the criminal law; measures for the protection of prisoners when set free. One of the most promising innovations is the introduction of the parole system of conditional liberation, as described in Edward Grubb's previous letter, which we published the other day, and found chiefly in the Northern and Middle States of the American Union. Some features of the system are familiar enough—for example, the release of prisoners who have behaved well before the nominal period of imprisonment has expired, and the liability to be rearrested if the conditions of their licenses are broken. What is novel is the employment by the prison boards in some American States of "parole officers," whose duty it is to interest themselves in prisoners who are released on probation, and to watch over and advise them at a critical time. What is no less novel and valuable is that these officers and local committees endeavor to help prisoners to get employment. In fact, few of them are released until they have been promised work. This is favorable to good results. "As a prisoner," it is justly remarked in the report of the State Commission of Prisons of New York, "is not paroled until the board is satisfied that somebody is ready and willing to give him employment, he has a much better chance to get along than the ordinary convict."

It might at first blush seem that such a system was open to the objections urged against the ticket-of-leave system, which, it was said, put the licensee in a false position almost incompatible with his making a fresh start in life. According to Edward Grubb, the American system works quite otherwise. The parole officers do not seem to be fussy and meddlesome; the surveillance which they exercise is not so close as to be offensive and prejudicial to the culprit's opportunities of recovering his lost status; it interposes a useful stage between the prison life, with no liberty and no responsibilities, and the position of those who must help themselves if they are to be helped. Certainly the figures as to the results of the parole system given by Edward Grubb are encouraging. With only a few changes in our criminal law, the best points of the system might be adopted here. The secret of its success lies mainly in the character of the officers and the zeal of the local committees; and what has been done by the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society is a security that voluntary agencies, fully efficient, could be found. Just a year ago there appeared in The Times an account by Alice Henry of "the first legally constituted juvenile court" established in Adelaide; and our correspondent to-day describes the attempts elsewhere to imitate an institution intended, as far as possible, to keep juvenile offenders free from contamination with their elders who are experts and veterans in crime. It often happens that the time spent by a boy or girl in the police station or court, in the presence and proximity of hardened offenders, and listening to one story of crime after another, is mischievous and depraving. Something has been done in this country and in Ireland to mend matters, and we reported, only on Monday last, the efforts of the State Children's Association in this direction. In several cities of America separate courts for children's cases have been at work for years with signal success. It is plain from our correspondent's account that a necessary complement to such courts, certainly in large cities, is the appointment of "probation officers" or officials, by whatever name described, whose business it is to look into the history of each case, verify the statements, often grossly false, made to the judge, question the employer or teacher as to the child's past, and ascertain what is best for its welfare. Attached to some of our police courts are a few benevolent persons, missionaries and others, who do work of this kind. But, if the state is to fulfill its duty in cutting off the supply of criminals and preventing their manufacture, the matter must be taken in hand more systematically than it has been, and with new appliances. The judge, the gaoler, the policeman and the hangman do not suffice for a perfect criminal administration. One or two societies have done excellent work not unlike that which Edward Grubb describes. In large towns there is need of a great extension of their labors.

Edward Grubb's communications look exclusively at one side of criminal law. They do not direct attention to another side, which a soft-hearted generation is apt to forget. We should be glad to get hints from America, or indeed anywhere, as to the treatment of the incorrigibles whose release from prison is a mockery, and to whom crime is a profession as much as bricklaying or carpentry is to others. Legislation has made some slight progress towards a firm and rational regimen for such irreconcilable enemies of society. It has not yet had the courage to do all that facts dictate. It would be to the honor of our Parliament if it were to be the first to act with vigor in regard to a class of offenders who are themselves not amenable to good influences, and who sedulously demoralize others. Towards such, a policy of leniency is a pestilent superstition. Among the inmates of every gaol there is a small minority of inveterate offenders, whom it is folly to release without obtaining security against their probable, almost certain, future misconduct.—London Times.

THE MOHONK INDIAN CONFERENCE.

The twenty-second Conference of Friends of the Indian met at the Mountain House by invitation of Albert K. Smiley and wife, on the 19th, 20th and 21st of Tenth month, 1904, about one hundred and fifty members being present. A report of the work done by the government during the past year was presented, and Commissioner Jones spoke of the decrease of rations issued and other matters.

Earnest addresses were made in behalf of education for the Indians, homes for those in Northern California, irrigation in Arizona and the exclusion of the liquor traffic from the Indian Territory and Oklahoma.

The conditions in Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines were eloquently set forth by men who had been there and knew whereof they spoke, and finally the following platform was adopted as conveying the "sense of the meeting":

PLATFORM OF THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL LAKE MOHONK CONFERENCE OF FRIENDS OF THE INDIAN AND OTHER DEPENDENT PEOPLES.

The twenty-second annual Lake Mohonk Conference of the Friends of the Indian rejoices that so much has been accomplished under the wise action of the national government in bringing the descendants of the aborigines of our land to the enjoyment of education, justice and equity, and to some of the benefits of our civilization, while the dependent peoples who have recently come under our care have been provided with nearly everything that has thus far been possible to improve their condition and to prepare them for the privileges and responsibilities of their new relations. We are encouraged to hope that nearly all the difficult problems with which these various wards of the nation have been surrounded will, ultimately, and perhaps speedily, meet with satisfactory solutions. For the Indians we feel that our paternal care must be continued for some time to come, while to prolong it unduly will result, as such care always does, in weakness and permanent injury; while for the people of our insular possessions we must guard against the dangers of too much regulation on the one hand, and of indifference and neglect on the other. The experience of our people in Alaska shows how easy it is for our Congress to fail to act upon important interests that happen to be remote.

We desire to reaffirm the statement made last year, that "in dealing with the Indians the objects to be accomplished are no longer questioned; they are the abandonment of the reservation system; the discontinuance of Indian agencies; such education of all Indian children as will fit them for self-support and self-government; access to the courts for the protection of their rights; amenability to the law in punishment of their crimes; the same liberty that white men enjoy to own, buy, sell, travel, pay taxes and enjoy in good government the benefits enjoyed by other taxed citizens; and by these means the speedy incorporation of all Indians, with all the rights of citizenship, into the American commonwealth."

In continuation of the foregoing, it is the sense of this Conference that the initial steps should soon be taken by Congress looking to the closing up of the business of the Indian Bureau, so soon as it may safely be done, leaving to the operation of the laws of the nation, and of the several States and Territories the protection of the Indians in their rights of person and property, the education of their children and in securing to them the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship.

The different conditions found in different localities should be carefully considered in whatever action may be taken in the interests of education and in the regulations of property. In all situations the common schools, for both white and Indian children, should be extended and safeguarded so as to provide for the education of all children to prepare them for good neighborly citizenship, while the evils of race prejudice are, so far as possible, avoided. Where the local authorities of state and country are unable to provide these, the general government should make adequate provision for the proper educating of its citizens. Day schools for Indians, where such are necessary, should be extended. Reservation schools and Indian boarding schools must be continued for some time to come, but, nevertheless, we believe they should not be enlarged nor increased in number, nor heavy appropriations made for permanent improvements. The policy of education, whatever its details may be, should ever have in view the strengthening of family ties, and the developing of the sacred relation of the home. This fundamental unit of American civilization should be fostered among the Indians as well as among ourselves.

Indian industries should be fostered by every practicable means. Instruction in agriculture and the useful arts should be liberally given them; especially should such of their native industries be encouraged as illustrate their distinctive abilities.

OUR ISLAND POSSESSIONS.

The Conference is gratified with the progress that has so far been made in the education and development of a portion of the inhabitants of the Philippine Archipelago. We especially commend the wise system of education that has been put into successful operation there. We would urgently recommend the extension of this system until the people shall all receive the inestimable advantages that will result from it. By these they will be prepared for the important career that awaits them, both in their own government and in their relation to the nation.

We ask our government to give especial attention to the industrial development of these islands and, as being of the greatest importance to them, to speedily provide for the unrestricted entry of their products to the markets of the nation.

We commend the wise action of the government in the revision of the laws of Porto Rico and in the establishment of an admirable system of education there. We are unable to suggest any improvement in this system, but we strongly urge the expenditure by our government of whatever sums may be necessary to secure the advantages of education to all the children of the island. At the present time but one in five of the children of school age receive educational advantages. We are aware of the seriousness of this undertaking, but we are convinced that the end will fully justify the means.

The conditions in Hawaii are so different from our other islands that quite distinct problems are there to be met. The large Asiatic population already there places upon the government a serious responsibility for such an education of their children as will prepare them for the duties of citizenship. More urgent laws should be speedily enacted and efficiently enforced that will conserve virtue and restrain vice. We recommend to Congress such action as may be necessary to secure the use of the English language in legislation and the courts as will comply with the conditions already stipulated.

In all our island possessions we are glad to find that we can unhesitatingly congratulate the country upon the fact that our government has sent to them so many earnest, zealous, highly trained and capable young men to meet and solve the difficult problems that have confronted them. This gives a hopeful evidence that our connection with these peoples will result to their great advantage and to our own. We feel that it is our duty to develop in all our dependent peoples whatever is strong and good in them, instead of endeavoring to cast them into the mold of our own racial characteristics, believing that thereby they may contribute to mankind something of permanent value.

The real duty before us with all dependent peoples is the upbuilding of character. This must be accomplished by the combined influences of religion and education. Our government can provide for the latter, but it devolves upon the Christian people of our land to see that the vast interests of religion are not neglected.

To pander to evil will not suppress it. To call evil good does not change it. To set one evil over against another will not counteract it. To excuse, condone or palliate it will not destroy it. The way to defeat the wrong is to exalt the right. The way to keep the devil out is to keep Christ in.—United Presbyterian.

Some Views on Present Day Topics.

"THE ONE SHALL BE TAKEN AND THE OTHER SHALL BE LEFT."

BY E. B. MENDENHALL.

Readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will, no doubt, remember that a few months ago two editorials and an article by one of its contributors were published, commenting on certain declarations made by Christ in His singularly interesting discourse found in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters of Matthew. And though they were not just alike in idea and exegesis, they were interesting, nevertheless, for the reason that they directed thought to the discourse as a whole. True, some of these utterances may seem incoherent—detached from anything antecedent or that follows and obscure in meaning. Witness the following as an example: "And they, answering, say unto Him, where Lord?" "And He said unto them, Where the body is there will the eagles also be gathered together" (Luke 17: 37). But in Matt. 24: 28, "Whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles (vultures, soar) be gathered together." If one would know how generally understood is the statement, "Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together," let him ask his friend what, and how much, does Christ mean by it; and almost invariably the answer will be: well, I don't know. What do you think? And quite likely the answer, though you ask a hundred, will be much the same. Does one ever hear a minister announce this deeply significant text as one on which he would preach a sermon?

The question and the answer to it are ingeniously elliptical. Supply the ellipsis and we may read: "And they, answering, say unto Him, where, Lord, shall the ones not taken be left?" "And he said unto them with the body—the carcass—with those who are saying: Lo, there! Lo, here! Behold he is in the wilderness! Behold he is in the inner chamber." The false prophet, the false Christ, is the carcass, the (dead) body; and to him will be gathered together the ones that are left, just as eagles—vultures—gather about dead bodies. The impure will seek companionship with impurity. No, the question is not where shall the one not left—at the mill, in the field—be taken? That question had already been settled in the thrilling, soul-enrapturing declaration, "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in clouds with great power and glory. And then shall He send forth His angels and shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the world" (Matt. 24: 30, 31).

No, Christ's "elect" do not seem to be contemplated in this scene as seeking a place or "body" unto which they would gather, but rather as being sought out and gathered together by the holy angels—gathered to Himself—our coming King. Yes, His elect—the ones that shall be taken—are contemplated even as resting in sleep, but as having their lamps and oil with them, ready at any moment, though midnight it may be, to hear and respond to the cry, "Behold the bridegroom!"

"In that day," "in that night!" With what consummate wisdom are the two measures of time—day and night—used. For since His "glorious appearing" is to girdle the world simultaneously; and since one-half of our globe is perpetually passing through the night period, His revelation will be "in that day" to half of the world, to the other, in that night, yet at the same moment (Mat. 24: 27). With some it may seem difficult to reconcile this visible, outward coming of the kingdom, accompanied with brilliant manifestations of power and glory, with the statement, "For lo, the kingdom of God is within you" (Luke 17: 21). No manifestation of power and glory in this exsistant, internal kingdom. On this text the spiritualist builds his belief in spiritualism—verily a slender foundation. Read the marginal reading, R. V.: "In the midst of you." If Jesus Christ could say of Himself: "I am the resurrection," "I am the way," "I am the truth," "I am the door," "I am the light of the world," He could also have said to those Pharisees, "I am the kingdom of God," here in your midst, within or among you as a people. Such a rendering is supported by the language employed by Christ when he sent out the seventy by twos "into every city and place whither He Himself was about to come." . . . "But into whatsoever city ye shall enter, and they receive you not . . . say unto them, howbeit know this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Yes, He Himself was that kingdom come nigh to those cities and places to which He had sent His disciples. He, the kingdom, was, or soon was, to follow, coming "nigh unto" either in distance or time. Repeatedly Jesus denounced the Pharisees as hypocrites. And therefore if his statement to them, "the kingdom of God is within you," is to be understood as does the spiritualist, and even as do many others, it follows that hypocrites have within their hearts—their souls—the kingdom of God! How palpably absurd! No, the answer Christ made to the Pharisees touching the coming of His kingdom need not enter into the consideration—into the interpretation—of the seemingly obscure, hidden sayings of Christ, uttered in this immeasurably important discourse. And for us to get hold of the startling truths it contains is one thing, but quite another for them to get hold of us.

Marshalltown, Iowa.

The Wine and Spirit Gazette, the recognized organ of the trade, says in its issue of Tenth month 14th, that "the McCumber pure food bill, the substitute for the Hepburn bill, pending in the Senate, will again be pushed at the coming session of Congress by the same aggressive and resourceful interests that previously advocated" its passage. The Gazette declares that the liquor trade is opposed to the bill in its present shape. This discussion of the liquor question arises at a time when the information about the sale of poisonous liquor comes to light in New York.

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS, OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

All communications should be addressed to

ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, 343 E. Main St., Haddonfield, N. J.

"But life shall on and upward go;
Th' eternal step of progress beats
To that great anthem calm and slow
Which God repeats."

The Executive Committee of the Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting held its monthly session on the 24th, with an attendance of many members.

Friends throughout the United States desiring temperance literature for wise distribution, can be supplied by addressing the editor of this column. Friends in the vicinity of Philadelphia are asked to assist in this important duty. A varied assortment is always found at 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia. There was great concern expressed that some Friend should feel it a duty and privilege to be chairman of the Committee on Coffee Stands, and attend to their opening throughout the city. A letter addressed to J. Snowdon Rhoads, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, upon this subject, will receive immediate attention. A letter to the clubs of Philadelphia has been prepared by the Literature Committee.

Arrangements are being perfected whereby Friends may keep in immediate touch through the Anti-Saloon League and the Reform Bureau, with the course of reform measures which will come before the State Legislature and National Congress this winter. We trust all may co-operate with these agencies by promptly sending letters, petitions and, in some cases, even telegrams and telephone messages to their respective representatives in these bodies. We feel that this can be made a great source of information to Friends, while at the same time it cannot help doing good, as similar work has done for reforms which Friends have labored for in the past.

On Sixth-day evening, during Kansas Yearly Meeting week, a meeting was held devoted to the subject of "Temperance." Dr. George E. Wright, of Stella Friends Academy, O. T., gave a strong address, which was well received. His theme was the Christian's duty in bringing about the legislation for good, for which we have been praying these many years. Alice Shinn illustrated the amount of money expended for luxuries and other commodities by a ribbon exercise. Mary Sibbitt gave a very encouraging report of the work for the year. Mahlon Perry read the first nine verses of first chapter of Joshua as our word from God on this subject. The officers for the year are: Chairman, Mary E. Sibbitt, Hutchison, Kan.; corresponding and recording secretary and treasurer, Alice Shinn, Wichita, Kan.; educational secretary, M. S. Fellow, Alva, O. T.

It is announced that an aggressive campaign will be made at the next session of the Pennsylvania Legislature to obtain a law giving local option in the various wards of the cities; a law that is said to be in successful operation in Ohio.

At last the Church is rousing itself to direct contest with the one great evil that more than all others has hindered its advance and negatived its work. We are to have pledges instead of platitudes, speech instead of silence, direct action instead of vague negation. The young people's societies are going to work against the young people's destroyer.

Dr. H. H. Wiley, chief of the Government Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C., says: "From what we have heard from dealers in whisky I am led to believe that fully 85 per cent. of the ordinary whisky of commerce is the adulterated article. It is a fraudulent transaction and should be prevented. It is my opinion that pure whisky, except in the most moderate quantities, is an injury to the human system. How much more so, then, must be this adulterated compound?"

How does beer rank as an "Apostle of Temperance?" On all sides we hear the cry, "If we would have the country temperate we must make it a universal beer-consuming country." This claim of beer as a reformer, to turn men from drunkenness to temperance, is the most absurdly pretentious and false claim it makes. If there is any one place in which it proves itself more a "lying beer" than any other, it is here, for if there is any foe to true temperance it is lager beer. It is the decoy duck of the liquor traffic. It is impossible for any man or woman to drink lager beer and remain wholly free from the appetite that finally will destroy those who indulge it. The inexorable law of drink is that the appetite will grow upon what feeds it. To indulge the thirst for alcohol in any form is to create a stronger desire for it. There is enough alcohol in lager beer to incite a desire for more, and it will require a larger and larger amount to gratify that appetite until the time will come when the demands of the system will not be satisfied with the amount of spirit in beer, and heavier liquors will be resorted to. God forbid that this country should ever be evangelized by beer, for it can never be what its advocates would have us believe it is, the "Apostle of Temperance."

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

One summer afternoon in 1845, Abraham Lincoln made a temperance speech at the "South Fork School House," sixteen miles from Springfield, Ill. He urged total abstinence, and invited the people to sign a pledge which he had written and had signed himself. That pledge has been discovered and revived and is used in the Gospel Temperance Department of the Anti-Saloon League. More than 200,000 have signed it since the Lincoln Legion was launched at Oberlin, on Tenth month 21st, 1903.

It is suggested that on the World's Temperance Sabbath, Eleventh month 27th, Abraham Lincoln's pledge be presented at your church service, Sabbath school, or Young People's Society, or better still in all of them. Write at once, with stamp, for free sample of "Lincoln's Pledge," to Howard H. Russell, 110 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, New York City. The following is the wording of the pledge of the Lincoln Legion:

"I hereby enroll with the Lincoln Legion and promise, with God's help, to keep the following pledge, written, signed and advocated by Abraham Lincoln:

"WHEREAS, the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is productive of pauperism, degradation and crime; and believing it is our duty to discourage that which produces more evil than good, we therefore pledge ourselves to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

CALL OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

Dear Friend: The organization known as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that has for thirty years been striving in many ways to make the world safer for our boys and girls, especially by the abolition of the drink traffic, will hold its national convention in our city, November 27 to December 4, 1904.

It is nineteen years since Philadelphia has had the privilege of welcoming the national convention. It was not without prayerful consideration that our membership assumed the responsibility of inviting these five hundred delegates to become their guests, feeling confident that many besides our own members would cheerfully respond when the need of financial aid was presented to them.

The local unions are doing everything in their power to make the convention a success. As co-workers with you in the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom, we ask your practical sympathy and hospitality for these Christian women, and trust you will facilitate the work of the committee by a contribution at an early date.

Very truly yours,
SUSAN G. MCFARLAND,
Chairman of Finance Committee.

1314 Franklin Street, Philadelphia.

A very cordial invitation is extended to all interested to attend the sessions of the convention at the Baptist Temple, Broad and Berks Streets, Philadelphia.

POISON AS WHISKY.

The death of seventeen men who drank the vile whisky sold in one New York saloon, with the arrest of the proprietor and the Coroner's examination of the stuff sold for whisky, gives wide currency to information about such poisonous concoctions which the National Pure Food Association and various medical and other societies have laid before Congress any time these ten years.

The Coroner discovered that it is a common practice in New York for saloons to manufacture their own whisky from chemicals, and that in many instances wood alcohol, a deadly poison, forms a part of the concoction. He also came into possession of one of those secret manuals used in the cheaper trade, which gives recipes for making all kinds of liquors and wines by the use of chemicals and cheap spirit. These manuals, named barkeepers' friends or assistants, are widely used not only in New York, but all over the country. A low-grade spirit, distilled from potatoes or potato rinds, or almost anything that may be fermented, which is almost poisonous in itself, is the basis of this "rat poison," as it is called. With the addition of oil of rye and several other chemicals, a barrel of whisky is manufactured on the spot which costs the mixer a cent a drink "if it is made bad, and two cents if it is made good," according to the Coroner. This is sold to the unfortunate consumer for ten cents. As a profit of from 400 to 900 per cent. is rare in a legitimate business, it may be readily suspected that millions of the people are being subjected to a process of slow or quick poisoning in this country.

The National Pure Food Association and those who were behind the pure food bill which was stifled in the Senate at the last session of Congress tried to give the Federal Government oversight of all liquors and drugs offered for sale in the United States, but powerful interests blocked the way in the Senate. When the bill comes up again at the next session the pure food associations everywhere should strengthen the hands of the sponsors for the bill. Many people are no doubt killed every year by whisky which is "good" or pure, but those physicians and others who have studied the doctored whisky abuses are confident that the victims of pure whisky are a small contingent compared with the myriads who are killed, rendered insane or made chronic invalids by poison sold as whisky.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

THE CANTEEN.

As in former years so this year the inspectors of the United States army are reporting in favor of restoring the canteen, or official place for the sale of intoxicating drink to the soldiers. Inspector-General Burton sums up the argument in the statement that "It seems to be almost the unanimous sentiment of the army that the one thing lacking to meet the soldier's wants and tastes is the canteen feature. The absence of this leads to sickness, the commission of military offenses, desertion and other crimes, as well as impaired discipline, by driving men to resort to low dives and grogeries that have sprung up, like mushrooms, around military reservations since the prohibition law was enacted." It is also reported that the Association of Military and Naval Surgeons of the United States unanimously adopted a resolution recommending restoration of the canteen. We have no doubt that these army officers and surgeons are honest in their opinion and they have a right to express it. Army officers are not unanimous, however, and there are high officers who are entirely opposed to the restoration of the canteen. We think this is a proper subject for consideration and the fullest light should be thrown upon it. There are several things that incline us strongly against the canteen. For one thing, Congress appropriated a million and half of dollars to provide for the army suitable places of recreation and social amusement without any bar attachment: what has been done in this direction? has any use yet been made of this money? If not, then let us hear no talk of a canteen until some better thing has been tried. Further, is intoxicating drink "the one thing lacking" to meet the wants and tastes of the army? Does "the absence of this lead to sickness"? It is commonly thought that the presence of such drink leads to sickness and crime rather than its absence. What do our leading railways think of this matter? Do they provide places where their employes can obtain drink while they are on or off duty? So far from doing this they forbid their employes to use such drink, and some of them will dismiss an employe even for entering a saloon. Must the government do for its soldiers what no railway company would do for its employes? It is shocking to our sense of right and decency to ask us to let our government go into the saloon business for its own soldiers. Why not try a better class of men? Cannot our army officers be as successful in controlling their men as our railway officials are controlling theirs? We say again that we are willing to have all light on this subject, but some of the light offered us seems to us to be darkness.

First-day, Eleventh mo. 13.—Love for God's house. Psa. 122.

Time.—Joash reigned 836-796 B. C.

Place.—Jerusalem.

Rulers.—Jehu, king of Israel; Hazael, king of Syria; Shalmaneser, king of Assyria.

Parallel Account.—2 Chron. 24.

Prophets.—Elisha in Israel, and Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, cousin of Joash, in Judah. This was not the prophet of the book of Zechariah.

Through the influence of Athaliah the worship of Jehovah had become greatly neglected, and the worship of Baal flourished. Now, after her deposition, and the accession of Joash under the influence of Jehoiada, the high-priest, there was a revival of the true religion.

4. "Jehoash." Another form of Joash. "The priests." See 2 Chron. 24: 5. "All the money of the hallowed things that is brought into the house of the Lord in current money, the money of the persons for whom each man is rated, and all the money that it cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the Lord." R. V. The money is in three classes:

(1) That which was of the nature of a poll tax; (2) that which was assessed; (3) free-will offerings.

5. "Every man from his acquaintance." R. V. Collections were to be made from those who were known to the priest. Compare 2 Chron. 24: 4. "Breaches." The walls had been neglected and breaches had been made.

6, 7. "Three and twentieth year of King Jehoash." That is, of his reign; this would make him about thirty years old. "The priests had not repaired the breaches." We are not told why, though it is clear from verse 7 that they had been receiving money to be applied for that purpose. Nothing is intimated of any wrong doing; it seems to have been due to want of interest. It is also possible that it was found to be a greater undertaking than was thought, and there were not funds enough in sight to warrant them, as they thought, in beginning the work. They do not appear to have been blamed. If they gave an explanation, it seems to have been satisfactory. "Now, therefore, take no more money." R. V. As we should say, now, do not make personal solicitations, do not assess.

8. "And the priests consented that they should take no more money from the people, neither repair the breaches of the house." R. V.

9. The result of the arrangement outlined in this verse was that it was seen that the priests could not tamper with the contributions, and that the contributors could be assured that the money would go to the fund to which it belonged. Seeing the money dropped in was an encouragement to others to do likewise. In Chronicles (2 Chron. 24: 9, 10) we are told that a proclamation was made throughout Judah and Jerusalem regarding the matter and that the people rejoiced, and brought in money and cast it into the chest. It was felt now that all that was given would be applied to the great work. The "king's scribe" was the public accountant. Public account should be given of all moneys contributed for charitable and mission purposes, and vouchers should be produced. Those who give are entitled to this. Some individuals, and some associations in our own day, could well follow this example in Old Testament history.

11. "The money being told." "Told," past tense of the old English verb "to tell," which means "to count." The modern word "bank-teller" retains this meaning. The R. V. is better. "The money that was weighed out." Compare 2 Chron. 24: 11. "And they paid it out to the carpenters and the builders." R. V. It is clear that the money was not paid to the laborers directly, but through the hands of "those that had the oversight," or, as we should say, the contractors.

12. The list of workmen in this and in the preceding verse gives an idea of how great was the dilapidation of the temple. "And for all that was laid out for the house to repair it." The overseers or contractors not only paid the workmen, but bought the materials.

13. There is an apparent contradiction between this verse and that in 2 Chron. 24: 14. The most probable explanation is, that the writer of Kings mentions certain vessels which were not made, while the writer of Chronicles mentions certain vessels, etc., which were made.

15. "Reckoned not with the men." They were so sure of their honesty that no bonds or accounting was required.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. The place of worship should be kept neat, comfortable and attractive.
2. Giving begets giving.
3. Giving arouses interest in the giver.
4. "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

OUR PARTNERSHIP AND FELLOWSHIP.

1 Cor. 12: 28-31; 13: 1-13.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 7.—One fold. John 10: 16.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 8.—One body. Rom. 12: 4, 5.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 9.—One in Christ. Gal. 3: 26-28.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 10.—One temple. Eph. 2: 15-22.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 11.—One faith and baptism. Eph. 4: 4-6.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 12.—Christ all. Col. 3: 11-15.

Our readings for the week might all be taken as notes on the first chapter of the first epistle of John. There we read of the fellowship of believers one with another, and with the Father and His Son, Jesus Christ. We are fortunate in the accuracy of the translation of the word that John used which suggests oneness, community of interest; for our good old English word, fellowship, meant originally the laying together of the fee or property of each so as to form a common stock.

The treasuries of heaven seem hardly to suffice to contain the blessings of God's children, since "the whole earth is full of His glory," and "all things" are ours, brought within our reach by the grasp of that faith that Christ came to impart. He first showed His fellowship with us, sharing our nature and living under the limitations of the flesh in order that in the midst of what we too often make the excuses for our shortcomings He might lead us into a triumphant fellowship with the Father.

We read of the disciples whom our Lord chose, and clearly their principal relationship was with Him as Teacher and Master; but we are sure that their companionship with one another meant much to them, and it is this, no doubt, that Christ emphasized when He declared that all His sheep should become "one flock" (R. V.); and the Christian who fails to enter the fold of some portion of this flock strives against one of the fundamental laws of human life, which is that the two or the many who are agreed shall walk together.

Paul makes use of various figures: the body, the grafted branch, the temple of living stones; each declaring mutual dependence and mutual capacity for helpfulness. The lonely toiler wearies and the unstayed hand droops before the battle is over. "Two are better than one. If they fall, the one shall lift up his fellow; but woe to him that is alone when he falleth."

The Church is "the body of Christ"—His bride. It is not a matter of indifference to any member of the Church that she is charged with the duty of raising the standard of personal righteousness or of neighborhood spirituality or of the national conscience, or that the carrying of the Light of Life into the dark places of the earth rests with the Church. For the Church is but the sum of all individual consecrations and obediences: it is the fellowship of the saints of whom we are called each to be one, not alone, but in that giving and partaking that makes all within the body minister and ministered unto.

KINDLY REMEMBERED.

KOTZEBUE, ALASKA, Tenth month 15, 1904.

Dear Friends: Hearts of all were gladdened on the 6th by the arrival of our supply vessel, and for several days the mission steam launch and about a score of native boats were busy unloading the one hundred and seventeen tons billed for this port. Three-quarters of this tonnage was due to the new school house sent to us this season. The lumber arrived in such a wet condition that it is doubtful if the building can be erected this season.

As usual much pleasure was received in opening boxes sent to us by different California meetings, as these contained many kindly remembrances to missionaries and hundreds of articles that will bring joy and gladness into many Esquimo homes. A unique feature is the "work bags" sent by San Jose, San Francisco and Berkeley, containing personal remembrances, and, like little "Jack Horner," at stated intervals the missionary is expected to "put in his thumb and draw out a plum." These oft reoccurring gift days do much to lighten the tedium of the long winter season. We pray His richest blessings upon all those who have by expenditure of time, labor and means made possible the sending of such a generous supply. There were probably as many as fifty calls for medicine yesterday, and one death so far, Albert Sampson, who was brought here ill last spring. His last words were: "I don't like to go through the dark, but don't even murmur, I shall soon be happy with Jesus."

A new feature of work here is the great anxiety that has arisen among natives, as to the spiritual welfare of their relatives at a distance, and we are requested to write and mail letters to their friends and relatives telling them about Jesus, and requesting them to become "Jesus' men." At almost every service some give their heart to the Lord. Some days as many as thirty are converted. We are rejoiced to know that we are to be numbered among the membership of California Yearly Meeting. Facts of discipline may not be understood, but what is better our people lead consistent Christian lives. At present we have a good standing membership of about 700, mostly Esquimos. We are pleased to know that Bertha Cox is coming with Anna Foster, to help at Deering, and that work there is to be auxiliary to this, under patronage of California Yearly Meeting.

The general health of missionaries remains very good, for which we are truly thankful to the great Giver of all blessings.

Your friends,

DANA AND OTHA THOMAS.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Dr. Murray S. Wildman occupies the chair of History and Economics at Central College, Fayette, Mo.

Anna J. Winslow will continue her labors as pastor in Glen Elder Monthly Meeting Kansas for another year. Her labors the past year have been blessed.

Edward E. Wildman has gone to Fayette, Mo., to occupy the chair of Biology in Central College, made vacant by the very sudden death of Professor Kilpatrick.

George A. Barton gave a lecture to the Friends in Pittsburgh, Pa., on the evening of Tenth month 22d, and acceptably attended the meeting the next morning. Many of our readers will be glad to learn that the meeting in Pittsburgh is regularly held and is growing in attendance and in interest.

Eugene Wilson, a minister from Emporia, Kan., attended meeting at Fruitland, Kan., the 22d and 23d ult., and held four services. His preaching was in the power and spirit of God. Many hearts were touched and some yielded to the Master's call.

The reorganization of the Executive Committee of Kansas Yearly Meeting is as follows: L. Clarkson Hinshaw, president, 241 Indiana avenue, Wichita, Kan.; Nathan Brown, vice-president, Cherokee, O. T.; Josiah Binford, treasurer, Wichita, Kan.; Eusebia S. Couch, secretary, Sterling, Kan.; Josiah Butler, general superintendent, Barclay, Kan.

An event of interest in two Yearly Meetings occurred at Cranston, R. I., on Tenth month 12th, in the marriage, according to the honored usage of Friends, of Alice C. Earle, of Fiskville, R. I., and Seneca H. Stevens, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Both of the contracting parties are ministers, the former being pastor in the meeting at Anthony, R. I. Their address for the present is Fiskville, R. I.

A series of meetings is being held at Monkton Ridge, Vt., conducted by Walter S. Aldrich and James Renfrew. On First-day, the 23d ult., the enthusiasm ran high. Many prayers found utterance and the gospel was preached with power. In the evening nearly forty gathered around the altar of prayer, including three or four young men and some young women who came for the first time.

Dover Quarterly Meeting was held at Sandwich, N. H., on the 22d ult. It was well attended and a living message was preached to the people. The meeting at Dover is not held, though the large ancient meeting house in that city is opened once in the year when the Quarterly Meeting comes there, as it does in the Fourth month. There ought to be power enough to build up a living congregation in this old centre of Quakerism where the house sits waiting for people to come in.

Sada Stanley, a minister of the gospel and a missionary from Jamaica, lately spent several days in Des Moines. She attended the Sabbath service and Christian Endeavor meeting, also the Women's Foreign Missionary Society the following Third-day. Sada Stanley had charge of the Sabbath evening service, and made a most earnest plea for an increased interest on the part of all to forward the mission work in foreign fields. On Third-day her talk to the Missionary Society was helpful, making everyone feel better acquainted with the workers and the needs of the field; and creating a determination in the heart of each to do more for the cause the coming year.

The Mexican Missionary for Tenth month gives the following: "The Sabbath before the opening of our schools in Victoria the Catholic priest warned his congregation from the pulpit against sending their children to Protestant institutions, declaring that they were centers of vice and immorality, and adding several other opprobrious names. He evidently went too far for we are far too well known for such things to hurt us, they only reflect on the one who utters them and lessen the confidence of the people in him. At any rate our schools have a better enrollment than ever before at this time of year and many have been turned away. Penn Institute for girls has 125 enrolled, 20 of whom are boarders. Juarez Institute for boys has 48 enrolled with 11 boarders. The teachers in the nuns' school also went from house to house trying to get parents to take their children out of our schools. The only effect was to cause the parents to come and tell us about it."

At New Garden Monthly Meeting, held at Guilford College, N. C., the 22d ult., four persons were received into active membership. A committee, F. S. Blair, Albert Peele and George W. White, were appointed to present a statement correcting the mistake made on page 223 of "Southern Heroes," concerning Isaac Harvey, who is reported as having been disowned by this Monthly Meeting for taking up arms in the Confederate army, and that he was afterward killed in battle. There is no complaint recorded against him. He was never disowned. He was never killed in battle. He was present and gave testimony to what is here written. He is a birthright member, highly esteemed. On First-day the 23d, the meetings were held in Memorial Hall of Guilford College. The room was well nigh full. Mary C. Woody preached an impressive sermon from Psalm 103: 19, "His kingdom ruleth over all." Near the close of the meeting President Hobbs made fitting announcement of the reception of the four new members the day before and tendered them a cordial welcome to the privileges of the church and for service in it.

Canada Yearly Meeting ministers who are located as pastors are as follows: H. A. Sutton, Bloomfield, Ont., Bloomfield Meeting; W. A. Rogers, Wooler, Ont., Wooler Meeting; Mary L. Gowdy, Moscow, Ont., Echo Lake Meeting; W. P. Firth, Pickering, Ont., Pickering Meeting; J. J. Mills begins his service Eleventh month 1st, Toronto Meeting; Frank Cornell, Newmarket, Ont., Newmarket Meeting; Benjamin Moore, Clarksburg, Ont., Heathcote Meeting; John H. Rogers, Meaford, Ont., St. Vincent Meeting; John R. Webb, Effingham, Ont., Pelham Meeting; Charles Walker, Beaconsfield, Ont., Beaconsfield Meeting; Robert H. Rogers, Norwich, Ont., Norwich Meeting; A. A. Colquhoun, Gowrie, Ont., Hibbert Meeting; Harry Parry, Hartney, Manitoba, Hartney Meeting; W. J. Armitage, Battleford, N. W. T., Friends' Colony (meeting not fully organized). Six of the above ministers labor in more than one meeting. A number are supported, altogether, or in part, from their own private resources, which requires most of their time through the week. Some also receive help from the Home Mission funds of the Yearly Meeting.

Josiah Butler, general superintendent of evangelistic work in Kansas Yearly Meeting, reports the following pastors already located for the year beginning Tenth month 16th, 1904: L. Clarkson Hinshaw, Wichita (East Side), Kan.; Daniel S. Pickett, Argonia, Kan.; Asher Mott, Emporia, Kan.; Nathan Ridgeway, Stanwood, Kan.; Robert Norris, Tonganokie, Kan.; Stella Hammond, Pleasant Plain, Kan.; Ira S. Bundy, Sterling, Kan.; Samuel A. Johnson, Lattarpe, Kan.; Francis Liter, Enosdale, Kan.; Benjamin Albertson, Haviland, Kan.; Ellwood Haworth, Spring River, Kan.; Albert Bond, Twin Mound, Kan.; Abijah Pickering, Friendship, Kan.; Robert Brown, Toledo, Kan.; Clifton Ellis, La Fayette, Kan.; David Commons, Independence, Elk River and Bolton, Kan.; Fred P. White, Springdale, Kan.; Robert C. Smith, Edson, Kan.; Elizabeth Howell, Pleasant Valley, Kan.; James M. Steely, Walnut Creek, Kan.; Enos Puckett, Farm Ridge, Kan.; David McFarland, Oak Valley, Kan.; Henry Dalrimple, Antioch, Kan.; Nathan Brown, Stella, O. T.; Ernest Howard, New Hope, O. T.; Parker Moon, Fair View, Mo.; Jeremiah Hubbard, Alba, Mo., and Miami, I. T.; Anna M. Ray, Hillside and Vera, I. T.; J. A.

Griffiths, Ramona, I. T.; George M. McGraw, Elwood, Neb. Several others are considering work, but have not made definite arrangements.

Friends' Bible Institute of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, Wilmington Yearly Meeting, was held at Martinsville, Ohio, beginning Tenth month the 20th, and continuing four days. Quite a number were prevented from attending the first two days on account of funerals. The sessions gradually increased in interest and number. Four and five lessons were given each day. Robert E. Pretlow gave two lessons, one on "The Basis, Form and Function of Church Organization" and one on "One Baptism." Emma S. Townsend also gave two lessons, "A Study in Ephesians" and "The Purpose of Culture in Relation to Religion." Edgar Stranahan gave an interesting lesson on "The Book of Jonah." Lizzie Miller spoke on the "World's Sabbath School Crusade to the Holy City," taking with her her hearers from our continent, across the Atlantic to the Madeira Islands, Gibraltar and Algiers across the Mediterranean, touching at Constantinople on through to Mt. Carmel, dwelling at length on their wonderful trip through the Holy Land, with stops at places made memorable to all Christians by the life there of Christ. Albert J. Brown gave two lessons, "The Value of Illustration in Teaching" and "Vision and Experience." Elbert Russell, of Richmond, Ind., gave six lessons, "King Ahab," "Sidelights on Israel's History," "The Rich Young Ruler," "The Sons of the Prophets," "The Trials of Spirits," "The God of Our Lord Jesus Christ." Albert J. Brown gave an interesting talk to the children at Sabbath school. He also delivered the institute sermon at the meeting for worship. These lessons showed a wide range of thought, and through all the Holy Spirit was made manifest. The regret was that more of the membership were not present to hear them. The general feeling is that it was a spiritual and intellectual feast. Emma West, Secretary of the Committee.

BIRTHS.

DILLINGHAM.—To J. Irving and Sara Keats Dillingham, Elba, N. Y., Tenth month 11th, 1904, a son.

MARRIED.

GIDLEY-DAY.—At the home of the groom's parents, near Hargrave, Kan., Tenth month 12th, 1904, Constance Day and Roscoe Gidley.

STEVENS-EARLE.—At the home of the bride's brother, James H. Earle, Cranston, R. I., Tenth month 12th, 1904, Alice C. Earle, Fiskville, R. I., and Seneca H. Stevens, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

DIED.

BANGHAM.—At the home of her son, in Pocomoke City, Md., Tenth month 21st, 1904, Martha Ann Bangham, aged over 88 years. She became a Christian early in life and was ever ready to do her part in the work of the Master. She served many years as clerk of the Monthly Meeting. She was a member of Dover Monthly Meeting, Clinton County, Ohio.

COGGESHALL.—At his home, near Balbec, Jay County, Ind., Ninth month 8th, 1904, Anuel H., son of Lindley and Hannah (Lane) Coggeshall, in his 41st year.

FRAZIER.—At his home, Gladesboro, Randolph County, N. C., Tenth month 17th, 1904, Solomon Frazier, nearly 88 years of age. He made a public profession of religion when quite young and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church (South). In 1861 he became a Friend because of his strong convictions against war; was conscripted for the Confederate army; suffered severe persecution and punishment at Salisbury, N. C., because he would not bear arms. He departed in the faith, an esteemed member of Springfield Monthly Meeting.

NORDYKE.—At Richmond, Ind., Ninth month 1st, 1904, Bernice, daughter of David Nordyke. She was a birthright member with Friends. She died after weeks of suffering, glad to go home.

RICHARDSON.—At his home in Lewiston, Maine, Ninth month 23d, 1904, Joseph T. Richardson, in the 62d year of his age.

SMITH.—At Indianola, Iowa, Ninth month 30th, 1904, Catherine Morgan Smith, in her 75th year. She was a minister and faithful member of Friends.

"WHACKS."AND WHAT THEY MEAN.

When Old Mother Nature gives you a "whack" remember "there's a reason, so try and say "thank you," then set about finding what you have done to demand the rebuke, and try and get back into line, for that's the happy place after all

Curious how many highly organized people fail to appreciate and heed the first little, gentle "whacks" of the good old Dame, but go right along with the habit whatever it may be, that causes her disapproval. Whiskey, tobacco, coffee, tea or other unnatural treatment of the body until serious illness sets in or some chronic disease.

Some people seem to get on very well with those things for awhile, and Mother Nature apparently cares but little what they do.

Perhaps she has no particular plans for them and thinks it little use to waste time in their training.

There are people, however, who seem to be selected by Nature to "do things." The old Mother expects them to carry out some department of her great work. A portion of these selected ones oft and again seek to stimulate and then deaden the tool (the body) by some one or more of the drugs—whiskey, tobacco, coffee, tea, morphine, etc.

You know all of these throw down the same class of alkaloids in chemical analysis. They stimulate and then depress. They take from man or woman the power to do his or her best work.

After these people have drugged for a time, they get a hint, or mild "whack" to remind them that they have work to do, a mission to perform, and should be about the business, but are loafing along the wayside and become unfitted for the fame and fortune that waits for them if they but stick to the course and keep the body clear of obstructions so it can carry out the behests of the mind.

Sickness is a call to "come up higher." These hints come in various forms. It may be stomach trouble or bowels, heart, eyes, kidneys or general nervous prostration. You may depend upon it when a "whack" comes it's a warning to quit some abuse and do the right and fair thing with the body.

Perhaps it is coffee drinking that offends. That is one of the greatest causes of human disorder among Americans.

Now then if Mother Nature is gentle with you and only gives light, little "whacks" at first to attract attention, don't abuse her consideration, or she will soon hit you harder, sure.

And you may also be sure she will hit you very, very hard if you insist on following the way you have been going.

It seems hard work to give up a habit, and we try all sorts of plans to charge our ill feelings to some other cause than the real one.

Coffee drinkers when ill will attribute the trouble to bad food, malaria, overwork and what not, but they keep on being sick and gradually getting worse until they are finally forced to quit entirely, even the "only one cup

The Japanese are returning by way of the French embassy, the watches, jewelry and other effects of the Russian slain that are buried by Japanese soldiers. Probably such scrupulous regard was never before shown in a war, on so large a scale, and we should be thankful for the progress it marks.

Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission recently issued show that for the year ending Sixth month 30th, 1904, the casualties on railroads in this country were 55,130, and that 233 were killed and 5,366 injured in excess of the year before. Since Sixth month 30th the record has been even worse and more appalling.

The czar has ordered a moving picture machine, so that he can have photographs made of battles in the East and have them reproduced in St. Petersburg, and so see how the war is going. It is a great improvement on going to the front in person, and the generals will see that only the most pleasing pictures are sent home.

"Ho" in North China means "river." Sha-Ho or Shaho is Sandy River. The sound which we have represented by "Sha" is by some written "Shakhe"—the final "a" of "Sha" being pronounced harshly. Thus the blood-stained stream at which the Russians made their memorable stand against the Japanese is correctly written either Shaho or Shakhe River.

A year ago we were told that various causes had combined to imperil the existence of the American Bible Society; but all will be glad to know that the past year has been one of genuine progress. There has been an increase in benevolent gifts from legacies, churches, individuals, and auxiliary societies. But the society still needs gifts, and generous ones.

Elaborate plans are being made at the City of Mexico for the inauguration of President Diaz, December 1. The celebration will last several days, and will evidently be a sort of popular testimonial to show the esteem in which the president is held by his people. A big fair is to be one of the features, and $8,000 has been put aside for an illumination of the grounds.

France's House of Deputies, by a vote of 325 to 237, has approved the government's course in rupturing diplomatic relations with the Vatican and recalling the French Ambassador. The French are distinguishing between clericalism and religion, and are backing both the premier and not a few of the more clear-sighted bishops in the separation of Church and State, confident that in France, as in the United States, it will work good to Catholicism.

The Baltic Squadron, on its way to the East, fired on the Hull fishing fleet in the North Sea. Two men were killed, and others of the crew wounded. The Russians claim to have mistaken the fishing fleet for a Japanese flotilla in disguise. The St. Petersburg government promptly issued a semi-official note expressing regret and willingness to make full reparation, while Great Britain asked for prompt action. Trouble was happily averted by referring differences to The Hague.

The New York subway, which has been in the process of construction since Third month, 1900, was officially opened to the public the 27th ult. Nine miles of about fourteen were ready for use, the balance will probably be finished within three months. The subway is the consummation of years of study of the transportation problem on Manhattan Island, and marks the completion of the first stage of what will be the most comprehensive system of rapid transit in the world. Considering the peculiar difficulties faced by its builders, the subway stands unique as a feat of engineering and construction.

Los Angeles, Cal., is to try the novel plan of maintaining a municipal forest. The idea has been carried out with success by European cities, but no municipality in the United States has even undertaken it. The Los Angeles forest will be known as Griffith Park, and will comprise a tract of 3,000 acres which has been waste land before. The government bureau of forestry has lent its aid to the scheme, and prophesies success. The forest will be used by the people of Los Angeles as a pleasure park, and the city will cut and sell the mature trees. Foreign municipal forests are self-supporting as well as pleasure giving, and there seems to be no reason why this venture should not be profitable in more ways than one.

The Secretary of State, John Hay, has carried out the President's instructions relative to proposing a second Hague conference. The note not only contemplates the reassembling of The Hague conference for the consideration of questions specifically mentioned by the original conference as demanding further attention, such as the rights and duties of neutrals, the inviolability of private property in naval warfare and the bombardment of ports by naval forces, but goes further by practically indorsing the project of a general system of arbitration treaties, the definition of contraband of war and the establishment of an international congress to meet periodically in the interests of peace. The issue of the call while the war between Japan and Russia is in progress is justified by the fact that the first Hague conference was called before our treaty of peace with Spain was concluded.

The House of Bishops and the House of Deputies of the Episcopal General Convention finally reached an agreement on the divorce question. The section of the canon relating to remarriage is as follows: "No minister, knowingly, after due inquiry, shall solemnize the marriage of any person who has been or is the husband or the wife of any other person then living, from whom he or she has been divorced for any cause arising after marriage. But this canon shall not be held to apply to the innocent party in a divorce for adultery; provided that before the application for such remarriage a period of not less than one year shall have elapsed after the granting of such divorce, and that satisfactory evidence touching the facts in the case, including a copy of the Court's decree, its record, if practicable, with such proof that the defendant was personally served or appeared in the action, be laid before the ecclesiastical authority, and such ecclesiastical authority, having taken legal advice thereon, shall have declared in writing that, in his judgment, the case of the applicant conforms to the requirements of this canon; and provided further, that it shall be within the discretion of any minister to decline to solemnize any marriage."

WHERE JESUS IS FOUND.

Never in a costly palace did I rest on golden bed,

Never in a hermit's cavern have I eaten idle bread.

Born within a lowly stable, where the cattle round me stood,

Trained a carpenter in Nazareth, I have toiled and found it good.

They who tread the path of labor follow where my feet have trod;

They who work without complaining do the holy will of God.

Where the many toil together, there am I among my own;

Where the tired workman sleepeth, there am I with him alone.

I, the peace that passeth knowledge, dwell amid the daily strife,

I, the bread of heaven, am broken in the sacrament of life.

Henry Van Dyke.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

We must not let go manifest truths because we cannot answer all questions about them,—Jeremy Collier.

A SILENT PILOT.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

IN ILLNESS.

Naught have I but weariness
After strong endeavor;
Day has dimmed to dreariness,
Fruit comes slow or never.

Yet I raise no foolish cry
Against heaven's unkindness:
More than I deserve have I,
Groping in my blindness.

Yet I have a springing hope
That to gladness moves me;
Somewhere I shall yet find scope,
For my Master loves me.

THE FACT OF SIN.

THE ENTIRE question of deliverance has been confused by conflicting theories of sin. We need to come back from sin in the abstract to sin as a fact within our own lives. I am a sinner because I have sinned. There is no description of sin anywhere to compare with that powerful narrative out of the actual life of the Apostle Paul, found in Romans 7: 9-25. The thing which moves us as we read it is that we see our own state pictured. A lower nature dominates and spoils our purer purposes—"what I would I do not; what I would not that I do."

Like a wise physician, he puts his finger on the spot and tells us our central trouble. We disobey our sense of right. We fall behind our vision of the good. We see the path, but do not walk in it. We hear the voice, but say "no" instead of "yes" to it. We yield to the sag of our lower inclinations. We are bound in the mesh of habits. In a word, we are under the dominion or, as Paul calls it, the law of sin. We drag a body of death about with us or, as we should say to-day, the will to follow the highest is "blocked" by habits and appetites and inclinations which have grown strong enough to dominate us and put us at their mercy. Whatever may be the origin of sin or the fine-spun theory of sin, this is the fact of sin—a structural tendency to go wrong, to drown the voice and ignore the light. Each act of disobedience carries its deep consequences with it. Each sin sets the nature, so that sin carries its own slavery in itself. The time comes when a person sees the good, but is too weak to realize it—a wretched man, indeed, desperately in need of deliverance.

"Deliverance" is the word—not forgiveness. Forgiveness is not enough. Forgiveness alone might spoil us and make us think lightly of our sin. No, it is no mere forgiveness which our panting, sin-defeated hearts cry out for. It is deliverance; deliverance not from punishment, but deliverance from sin itself. We want to know more than the bare fact that there is goodness, grace, love, forgiveness in the heart of God. We want to be set free from the law of sin by the dominion of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. We want the blackness replaced by whiteness, we want the weakness replaced by power, we want to experience a set of nature which makes us more than conquerors.

Where is there any such power? What can bring deliverance? What produces "the new creation" in a soul under the law of sin? The cross of Christ. Jesus Christ and Him crucified. The discovery that He loved me and gave Himself for me. This is what Paul calls the gospel of reconciliation.

I cannot go on just the same when I discover that my course brings pain and suffering to any other soul. If I see that one who loves me is bearing my sin, and suffering under the burden of it, I am drawn by the power of that love, I am touched by the sense of that suffering. I cannot go blindly on enjoying my low life when I see its dark shadow falling on another face—a face full of love.

Ah, but it is not merely another human face on which the shadow of my sin falls. It is God that suffers. The shadow of my sin lies across His face. The cross tells us that,—He bears our sins. This heart of infinite love and tenderness and sympathy vicariously suffers in my sin—when I spoil my life He travails in pain. By the love which Calvary exhibited think of the meaning of your sin. I beseech you in Christ's stead be reconciled to God and live under the dominion of grace!

WANTED—WISE LEADERSHIP.

GOD'S WORK gets done here on earth through persons. Doubtless a world might have been made in which God worked directly with invisible hands, without the help and "co-work" of any human life. Such a world has not been made here. If a truth is to be revealed, it comes through somebody. If the world is to be lifted to a higher level, somebody is found to head the movement. If society is to be penetrated with the power of a new idea or a new force, somebody must first embody and express the idea. Everywhere in this world God and man work together in co-operation.

The great period of Quakerism was a period of wise human leadership. The closer one examines the movement of which George Fox was the prophet, the more one is impressed with the fitness of the man.

He had his limitations and he made his share of blunders. But when all is said, he was a great man—one of the greatest of his century, and one who could lead his century because he had discovered what the earnest men about him were all feeling after. He had discovered it and he knew how to tell it. That made him a leader, and that explains the fact that 50,000 members were gathered in during his lifetime in England alone.

We have many needs to-day, but none greater than that of leadership—the need of persons who can discover what the age is longing for and feeling after, and who can tell it in warming and quickening words. Abraham Lincoln once said, in his keen way, that God must love “common people” or He would not have made so many of them! So He does, and a leader would be useless were there not multitudes waiting to be kindled and directed by his fresh message and his calm insight. But so long as there are only common people, i. e. persons who live by tradition and habit, there is no advance possible. The advance begins when the leader who sees can make those about him see.

Just here is our present lack: “Men who know what Israel ought to do.” We have many willing spirits, good enthusiasm, earnest purpose, considerable latent power and large possibilities. They want igniting, fusing, directing. The “go forward” from the voice of a prophet who sees is what is missed.

Every good movement forms ruts in which even those who once were leaders get stuck. The brazen serpent which once wrought cures gets to be a fetish, an idol. The old phrase which once worked miracles loses its original freshness. New generations want new war cries, new visions, new battles to fight, a new call. We want now the leadership which the present period demands—the leadership, not of authority and dogmatism, not the leadership which controls meetings and gets its ends by “influence”—but the leadership of spiritual insight, the leadership which goes with wisdom and love and truth and an unbroken connection with the life of God. We want not one such leader, but a dozen, a score, a hundred, a thousand.

STILL ANOTHER ARBITRATION VICTORY.

SECRETARY HAY and the French Ambassador signed last week in Washington a treaty of arbitration between the United States and the Republic of France. The exact wording of the treaty will not be made public until it comes before the Senate for ratification. But it is understood to be drawn on similar lines to the one made a year ago between Great Britain and France. The main articles of the French-British treaty are as follows:

“Article 1. Differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties, and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th of July, 1899; provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence or the honor of the two contracting States and do not concern the interests of third parties.

“Article 2. In each individual case the high contracting parties, before appealing to the Permanent Court of Arbitration, shall conclude a special arrangement defining clearly the matter in dispute; the scope of the power of the arbitrators and the period to be fixed for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the several stages of the proceeding.”

LOSS OF PERSPECTIVE.

THERE WAS a football game between two great institutions of learning recently. Thirty thousand persons were in their seats watching it. This is the sort of stuff which was written about the contest the next day:

Imperial Rome never witnessed a more inspiring athletic scene. Had despotic Nero, baton in hand, sat on the stone seats of the great stadium and heard the crash of the rush lines, the shock of mangling tackles, the hoarse yells and cheers of mad partisans, he would have been vividly reminded of the days of the Eternal City when the struggling gladiators of the amphitheatre eagerly watched for that sign which meant life or death for the defeated.

The picture will never fade.

There was no cheering in Boston's streets to-night, no lighting of fires, no wild enthusiasm of undergraduates. Over the Charles in classic Cambridge they are still wondering over their defeat, asking unanswerable questions of how it happened. Harvard is crushed. Her sons are sorrowing, her daughters weeping.

Pennsylvanians will never forget the heroes that to-day's battle made. High among the football stars of Old Penn will henceforth be the name of Piekarski. In the hall of football fame he has won a lasting place. To-day's game elevated him to a pedestal so high and glorious that it will be difficult for other Quaker players to reach such a standard in the future. The big guard was an Ajax, an Achilles, a Paris, seemingly combining the strength, skill, speed and valor of all three warriors of legendary Troy.

These paragraphs are taken from the square yards of similar seething description which fill the pages of this edition. What confidence could any one have in the judgment of a paper on any great issue if it floods us with such excess of language over a football victory?

One day of good preaching is no match for six days of inconsistent practice. God will never honor His Church with complete success until it completely honors Him.—T. L. Cuyler.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE FUNDAMENTAL VIRTUE.

BY ROBERT E. SPEER.

There is nothing in Paul's epistles more characteristic than his love of the homely and practical virtues. He is a theologian and a mystic. But we have not gone far with him in his doctrinal reasonings before he suddenly confronts us to demand whether the moral implications of his doctrine are finding expression in our lives. And though we may have gone up to the seventh heaven of spiritual ecstasy with him and forgotten that there is any matter of fact earth, he has not forgotten, for we are unexpectedly brought up with a round turn and asked whether we are now going to be more loving in our homes, more pure of heart, more diligent in service because of what we have seen. The apostle is set upon tying up the religious impulse whether it comes from doctrine or from feeling to our actual daily life and the kind of men and women we are to it.

And there is none of the virtues to which he always comes in his teaching, on which he lays greater emphasis than simple fidelity. He says that all Christians are to be regarded as trustees or stewards, and that as such the supreme requirement is that they should be found faithful. When presenting a judgment of his own on a delicate moral question he commends it by saying, "I give my judgment as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful." In one of his letters to Timothy regarding the church administration, he urges as the crowning virtue of women that they should be "faithful in all things." And as to God Himself, he rests at the last upon the solid confidence that however much vacillation and uncertainty life may hold, "God abideth faithful." More than a score of times in his letters he returns to dwell with earnestness upon this fundamental moral requirement.

There is something in this which begets a deep trust in Paul himself. We feel about him all the air of a great integrity. And the presence of this atmosphere in his Epistles is a strong commendation of the letters themselves to our confidence. We find it difficult to believe that any of these letters, so full of a self-evidencing moral probity and enthusiasm for righteousness, could after all have been just cleverly concealed forgeries and that liars could have uttered such superb moral appeals, appeals stamped on the face of them with such glorious moral consistency.

Now this constant connection of religious thought and feeling with moral fidelity of character and action in Paul's Epistles, is doubtless due in large part simply to the unconscious integrity of his own religious and moral nature. His whole life was a unity, and he taught right conduct because his scheme of thought was a moral coherence and he was a right man. But on the other hand, it was also due to the fact that he consciously realized the peril of divorcing morality and religion, of being pious without being good, and was bent on eliminating any such suicidal influence from the Christian Church. This is no imaginary peril. The Pharisees succumbed to it. They were devout religionists and at the same time, as Jesus sternly told him, "children of Hell." And the danger into which they fell is as real in the case of our more advanced spiritual conceptions of religion as in the case of their formalism and ceremonial sham. Indeed, it may be said to be greater because the evil and harm of it are so much more awful. We may be using the vocabulary of the higher spiritual life, and by the unfaithfulness of our experience and conduct to these spiritual standards be perpetrating the very moral horror against which Paul's soul rebelled and to which he addresses himself in some form in almost every one of his Epistles.

One recognizes in our own rough daily judgments that fidelity is the discriminating test of men. We are told that So-and-So has made a certain statement. That gives the statement no significance of value to us. But So-and-So also made it. That quite alters the matter. He is a faithful man and his own trustworthiness covers all that issues from him. It is what we seek in servants, simple fidelity in all quiet and unostentatious duty. And it is what we crave in friends. "Give us a man," said Dean Stanley, "young or old, high or low, on whom we can thoroughly depend, who will stand firm when others fail; the friend, faithful and true; the adviser, honest and fearless; the adversary, just and chivalrous; in such a one there is a fragment of the Rock of Ages." For as Paul joyfully realized, fidelity is the very nature and characteristic of God. Whatever else changes: He changes not. He abides faithful because it is His own being. He cannot deny Himself.

Love, says Paul, is a greater thing than faith or hope, but love in this sense is simply fidelity, the realization in life of the faithfulness of God. We are accustomed to think that life is the great thing and many of our theologians and moralists teach that while theoretically truth is supreme, yet in a crisis it may be sacrificed for life. But Paul's doctrine is that fidelity, which is simply veracity in action, is sovereign over life. And this is Christ's doctrine, "Be thou faithful unto death and I shall give thee a crown of life." That was the closing verse in a small Christian tract prepared for distribution to the Japanese soldiers going to Manchuria. A captain read it with delight. "That is the religion for us," he said. A curate, whom the late Archbishop Temple proposed to send to a very difficult post, was urged by his friends to decline, on the ground that he would not live two years in the strain and trial of it. He came to Temple; "Yes, it may be so," was the reply, "but you and I don't think of things like that, do we?"

Dying is a trifle, an incident in the temporary episode of life, but fidelity is no trifle. It is an anchorage in the eternal moral integrity of God. To betray it for the sake of life or any other bauble is to trade diamond for glass, to build hay, whose end is fire instead of gold, which is to be tried and to endure.

This conception of what after all is the greatest thing in life dignifies our common ways. It brings the heroic within the reach of each one of us. If we can display the divine nature in our common living, then that glory is possible to everyone. And it is by taking advantage of this possibility of fidelity in the ordinary things of life that we shall come some day without knowing it to the glory of the divine character realized in life.

New York City.

THE CHRISTIAN TREASURES.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The constant question in the haunts of business men is—Where shall I find a safe investment? Our Divine Master anticipated all such questions when He said, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." Paul was probably accounted a poor man at Corinth; for he earned his daily bread with a tentmaker's needle. But in God's sight he was a millionaire. He could say, "I know whom I have believed, and that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him against that day." The great apostle had made Jesus Christ his Trustee. He had put his affections, his soul and his everlasting hopes into his Saviour's hands; and when he reached heaven he knew that he would find the great deposit safe. He had made up nothing that moths could consume or rascals steal. His investments were in the real estate that never depreciates, and the Son of God had charge of it. So may every true Christian—whether in a brown-stone mansion or in an attic—congratulate himself that what is precious to him is in the keeping of his Saviour.

The grand old tentmaker had other treasures laid up on high also; all the glorious spiritual results of his life were there. Brother and sister in Christ, so are yours and mine, however humble. And whatever we give up for our Master's sake increases our heavenly treasure. The profits which we might make and which we sacrifice, in order to keep a clean conscience, add to our wealth, for they can make us "rich towards God." Hoarding money, stealing time from prayer and Bible reading, nursing popularity, all are wretchedly impoverishing. Giving up for Christ is an enriching process. Whatever we lay down here in order to please and honor our Master, will be laid up to our account yonder. Our God is a faithful Trustee; He keeps His books of remembrance. He will reward every one according as his work shall be. Two talents will pay a grand dividend; yes, and one talent will sparkle when some humble mission teacher presents her class on the last great day, and says: "Here am I, Lord, and these children I brought to Thee!" When we speak of salvation as by grace, and not "of works," we must not forget that other truth that God will judge us according to our works. They will be laid up there.

If the selfish sinner's "wages" are paid in hell, a Christian's wages are paid in heaven.

Compound interest will make some of Christ's servants magnificent millionaires. All that Paul gave up of worldly self and profit and fame and ease and emoluments, will stand to his credit up there; and the results of all this life of self-sacrifice for Jesus have been going on accumulating every day for eighteen centuries, and who can tell what they will amount to when the judgment morning breaks. People sometimes speak in a pitying tone of "poor ministers with small salaries." Wait until the treasure chests are opened up yonder, and see if any one will call that hard-working soul-winner poor. John Bunyan when in jail comforted himself with the thought that he had "rich lordships" in those souls whom he had led to Jesus. What a Croesus the old tinker of Bedford will be when he comes into full possession of his inheritance!

Benjamin Chidlaw, in the hard struggles of his boyhood, sewed the skins of trapped animals into mittens in order to earn a few shillings; that log cabin fitted him for his great work as a pioneer of Western Sabbath schools. I should not wonder if troops of children will salute him up in the Father's house. To John Eliot the converted Indian will be a star in his crown. Judson must have already met his "treasures," brought home from the mission fields in Burmah. I have been reading the letter of our young American brother, Mr. R. P. Wilder, announcing the conversion of that Brahmin in India; his soul was filled with joy, for such a convert may make a breach in the wall of heathenism through which others will pour in. Who says that investments in foreign missions do not "pay?"

The simple fact is that the only investments that do pay an interest through all eternity are those which are made for the cause of Christ and in His service. The gains are already up there. Poor city missionaries and frontier preachers and Salvation Army soldiers and godly needlewomen have their savings books at God's right hand. Those banks never break. The only change from heavenly treasures is their enlargement. There is no corruption from within, and no consumption from without. The moth never gnaws there, and the burglar never breaks through to steal. It is impossible to compute the treasures every faithful, self-denying Christian may be storing away for his or her long life in glory; God keeps His record on high, and each good deed of love, each act of self-denial, each surrender of pride or worldly ambition for Jesus' sake, will find sure remembrance there. "Follow Me, and thou shalt have treasures in heaven," says the Master. My dear reader, how much real estate have you got?

THE BIBLE AND SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

BY EDWARD JUDSON.

My subject is an innocent one. I have an impression that the Bible is an important factor in the promotion of spiritual efficiency and growth, and I do not object to imparting that impression to others. Indeed, no one in this presence would dispute this proposition. It certainly is believed by the holy church universal—by which, I suppose, we mean all good Christians everywhere—that the Bible is an important factor in the promotion of spiritual efficiency and growth. After all, it is the chief part of our task as teachers and preachers, not so much to bring in some new-fangled thing, as to reiterate and to emphasize, to enforce and to clothe with perennial freshness, the great primal, cosmic truths of Christianity. As Herbert Spencer puts it: "It is only by varied iteration that alien conceptions can be forced upon reluctant minds." The office of the Holy Spirit Himself is not to impart some new truth, but to bring to our remembrance the things of Christ.

The real orthodoxy of the present day consists, not in a loose, slippery hold upon a solid mass of dogmas, but in our fervent and intense grasp of the few essential, elemental truths that underlie Christian consciousness everywhere. It is a mistake for me to be always harping upon my divergences from the views held by my fellow-Christians. Rather let me realize in a new way the simple, old-fashioned truths that we believe in common, and that clamp us together as with hooks of steel. Even if I seem to have got hold of some new truth, let me be slow to discredit and to denounce the old. I need not fear that people will remain long unaware of my discovery. Genuine truth is possessed of a kind of atmospheric diffusiveness. The church has a way of quietly laying its errors, one by one, upon the shelf, and forgetting to take them down again. Infant damnation and a material hell, once devoutly believed, are cases in point. We simply wake up some fine morning and are aware that we do not believe that way any more. "Lo, he was not; I sought him, but he could not be found." It is a species of intellectual frivolity for me to go around knocking away what seems to me the defective props upon which I see my fellow-Christians leaning, unless I am sure that I can replace them with something better. Rather let me imitate the mighty reserve of the divine Pedagogue, who said: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." He could embrace the whole truth in His palm, and yet unclothe only His little finger.

The body of literature which we call the Bible—the crystallization in human speech of the best religious consciousness of mankind, expressing itself through a period of many centuries—seems to be exactly the food required by the spiritual appetite of man. We may say of that Book what Daniel Webster said of Massachusetts: "There she stands. Look at her." As long as man possesses a spiritual nature transcending the body and the soul that he shares with the lower animals; so long as he is not mere beast; so long as there is that in his being which feels the difference between right and wrong, and aspires, and prays, so long will he instinctively resort to the Bible and find there the food adapted to his higher self. Independently of theories of inspiration, and of the higher criticism—which ought perhaps to be called higher appreciation—apart from questions of origin and date and structure and authorship and readings and canon, the sixty-six books contain just what is needed for the spiritual nature of all alike—the little child, the old woman in the chimney corner, the profligate and the saint, the illiterate and the sage. Sir Walter Scott, when dying, asked to be read to. "From what book?" inquired his friend, glancing toward the richly furnished library, and the answer came: "Need you ask? There is but one." I am reminded of the old heathen woman in Burma, who, when she heard for the first time the message of the cross, let down her long flowing hair, and said: "These tresses have grown white waiting to hear this story." At this spring the saints and the martyrs of all the ages have slaked their thirst. Explore their pages and you will find no great thought that cannot be traced back to this source. So that, within the realm of literature relating to conduct and to religion, one is tempted to generalize: If it be true, it is not new; if it be new, it is not true.

The Christian does not read the Bible merely for its literary value. To him it is a devotional book. He describes mirrored in its limpid depths the very image of God. He reads the Old Testament because it yields a pure and exalted conception of God. No such thought of God can be found in any other than Christian literature. Somehow or other, out of the consciousness of the Hebrew race there emerged an image of God infinitely superior to that found in the literature of any other ancient people. Just as in our own individual lives things keep happening to us all the time, day after day, and, through processes of reflection upon these happenings, we form little by little a clear conception of the God back of them, thinking of Him as a Being either vast and cruel or else infinitely tender and loving—like a mother bending over her infant who is uneasy and in pain—so the Hebrew race, in its upward struggle, kept all the time, as we believe, under the brooding influence of the Holy Spirit, drawing inferences from things that happened to them—a defeat here, a victory there—and thus gradually came into the full consciousness of Jehovah, a Being of blended majesty and pity, infinitely transcending any thought of God held by contemporaneous races. This idea first took shape in the minds of sages, saints and prophets—men of spiritual insight who thought profoundly upon current events and who Dipt into the future far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world and all the wonder that would be.

In their writings glimmer this image of the Eternal; as in the ninetyeth Psalm and in the fortieth chapter of Isaiah.

The Old Testament, then, seems to be made up of two streams flowing along in a single channel—history and literature. On one side we find the chronicle of those happenings which formed a kind of steep, perilous pathway along which this strenuous race groped its way and at length found a God, eternal and holy, and yet full of mercy and compassion. On the other side, we have a sublime literature, in which the choicest spirits of the race seem to be throwing out words at this vast conception of God, and endeavoring to foreshorten Him within the gaze of their contemporaries. Such a thought of God must, in the nature of the case, be anthropomorphic. He must be pictured as a man—with eyes and hands and feet. And this Hebraic conception of God would inevitably be subject to the law of evolution, being faint and crude in its earlier stages, and only gradually approaching distinctness and perfection. What was right in earlier ages might be wrong later on. The morality even of the Ten Commandments is negative, superficial, incomplete. They should never be inscribed in a Christian church, except perhaps for their historic suggestiveness, indicating God's dealing with a primitive race. While the moral principles of which they are the concrete and symbolic expression are universally and eternally obligatory, as laws they are no more binding upon us Christians than the laws of England are binding upon Americans. All their ethical meaning finds a nobler and purer and more positive expression in the teachings of Christ and of His apostles.

This august reflection of God that scintillates here and there on the broken surface of the Old Testament history and literature seems thus, after all, only dim and shadowy, partial and progressive. It could not make the worshiper perfect. Only in the Christ of the New Testament does it finally achieve its full-orbed splendor. The twilight of Old Testament conjecture brightens into the dawn of New Testament revelation. Here we find the divine personality of Jesus portrayed in exquisite outlines; His life and His teachings narrated and interpreted by those who stood closest to Him. Such a character surely could not have been invented by Galilean peasants. That was not an age of novels. The production of characters out of whole cloth is the work of transcendent genius like that of George Eliot. In Christ we have the heavenly Father unveiled. Christ not only teaches us to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven," but He says: "He that hath seen Me, hath seen the Father." He is the express image of the divine Person. The infinite contracts itself, so as to come within the embrace of man's thought and affection. The divine, in simple and pathetic fashion, reveals itself in a human life.

So the All-great were the All-loving too.
So through the thunder comes a human voice Saying, O heart I made, a heart beats here!
Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself.
Thou hast no power nor mayst conceive of mine,
But love I gave thee with myself to love,
And thou must love me who have died for thee.

UNSETTLING MEN'S FAITH.

BY S. A. WOOD.

Some years ago I heard a sermon in which the speaker, after taking his text, said: "My object in speaking from this text is that you who believe that you are sanctified may see whether you are mistaken or not." The law of mental philosophy is such that of necessity the faith of every sanctified person in that audience who listened, applying test after test as given, was unsettled for the time being. There was an abundance of evidence of this when the speaker, without leading his hearers through to a settling of the question, asked all who were sanctified to stand. All over the house could be seen those who started to rise and settled back in their seats two or three times before they could stand. I, myself, made the third effort before I could rise to my feet, and then only by getting my bearings independent of the sermon. Several came to me after the meeting saying, "I thought I knew where I was, but that sermon has unsettled me." I said to myself: "By the grace of God I will never preach a sermon of that character."

There is no one thing so fruitful in making shipwrecks of faith as that of applying ourselves with tests. Think of some one going to an Israelite who had looked at the serpent of brass and been healed, and telling him to carefully examine himself all over and see if there are any sore spots, that he may know whether he is deceived or not; or some one instructing the leper who was healed by the touch of Jesus to critically examine himself to see if the least spot of leprosy remained. The whole system of applying tests is foreign to the Christian faith. And yet many of the series of meetings are begun by using critical tests, unsettling the faith of the best Christians, so that they doubt past experiences and are the first at the altar in each succeeding revival to be recounted each time as an evidence of the success of the meetings. This has gone so far that it has brought great reproach upon the truth and the ministry is largely responsible for it.

Another result of this evil is the making of exaggerated statements of truth, so that the hearers are led to expect extreme things, and are disappointed because they are not realized. Hymenaeus and Philetus are not the only ones "who concerning the truth have erred . . . and overthrown the faith of some."

Adrian, Mich.

I know that with consecration on the part of believers, separation from worldliness, disentanglement from enslaving sins, and a mighty baptism of the Holy Spirit, the Church would become a conquering power in the world, not by its constructed theology, not by its Sabbath services, not by its arguments to convince the intellect, but by its simple story of Jesus' love.—A. LESSON VIII.

ELEVENTH MONTH 20, 1904.

ISAIAH'S MESSAGE TO JUDAH.

Isaiah 1: 1-9, 16-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Cease to do evil; learn to do well.—Isa. 1: 16, 17.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 14.—Isaiah's message to Judah. Isa. 1: 1-9.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 15.—Isaiah's message. Isa. 1: 10-20.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 16.—Judah's wickedness. Isa. 1: 21-31.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 17.—Whiter than snow. Psa. 51.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 18.—What God requires. Micah 6: 6-9.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 19.—The condition of the sinner. Rom. 3: 10-23.

First-day, Eleventh mo. 20.—The true washing. Titus 3: 1-8.

Time.—745-735 B. C. Probably at the time of an invasion of Judah by Syria.

Kings.—Judah: either Jotham or in the early years of Ahaz. Israel: Menahem or Pekah.

Place.—Isaiah prophesied for the most part in Jerusalem.

The lessons now omit a considerable period of time. Under Jeroboam II (782-741) in Israel, and Uzziah (778-740) in Israel, the kingdoms reached their height of prosperity and their greatest geographical extent. The result upon the Israelites was what might have been expected. "Israel, in so far as she recognized her God-given destiny, was bound to remain an isolated people. She could not compete with other nations for the prizes of the world, nor could she consistently employ its weapons." Power, prosperity, association with other peoples were great temptations to embrace foreign customs, and both Israel and Judah yielded. The only voices raised against this course were those of the prophets. "Their voices were uplifted in the hope of recalling the chosen people to a sense of its mission to the nations, and they advocated such courses of policy as were demanded not by considerations of worldly interest, but by the essential principles of Jehovah's religion." Of these prophets none understood his mission more clearly or fulfilled it more thoroughly than Isaiah. Isaiah was most probably a native as he was undoubtedly a citizen of Jerusalem. He appears to have been a man of rank; he was married and had two sons (7: 3; 8: 3). His prophetic career began "in the year that King Uzziah died" (6: 1), which was sometime between 740 and 738, and he was alive in 701; his prophetic career, therefore, lasted about forty years. During this long period Isaiah was the most prominent figure in his country, both in politics and religion.

With the exception of the Psalms, the book of Isaiah is the most read of all the books of the Old Testament, by none is it surpassed in beauty of diction, loftiness of thought and spiritual teaching.

1. "The vision of Isaiah," etc. It is clear that Chapter I is an introduction or preface and not Isaiah's first prophecy, which began as related in Chapter VI.

2. This chapter has been called "The Great Arraignment." Jehovah is, through Isaiah, the Complainant and also the Judge, and at the end (verses 24-31) he gives the sentence. "Hath spoken." Through his prophet. "They." Emphatic; notwithstanding what He has done, and that they are children they have rebelled.

3. Even the beasts know who cares for them, but Israel is more brutish than brutes.

4. This verse is in the form of a climax. "Gone away backward." He doubtless has special reference to idolatry.

5. The prophet asks if it be possible that they wish for more suffering and more punishment.

6. "Sole of the foot even unto the head." Every class of the population is affected.

7. The Syrians had been ravaging their country. Their prosperity had been followed by a time of supineness and weakness, and of this their enemies had taken advantage.

8. "Daughter of Zion." Jerusalem. "As a booth in a vineyard." R. V. A temporary abode. A lodge was a hastily and rudely built hut for the temporary shelter of those who tended the garden. Cucumbers were a common article of diet in the summer. "Besieged." Jerusalem at this time was practically besieged.

9. There were a faithful few, and they were enough to preserve Jerusalem from the fate of Sodom and of Gomorrah.

10-15. In these verses the prophet emphasizes the thought that Jehovah cares not for outward ordinance or profession in themselves; indeed, when not performed or uttered in sincerity they are an abomination to Him.

16. "Wash you, make you clean," etc. This is the first condition. It is the equivalent of the "Repent" of the New Testament, and is explained by what follows. "Cease to do evil." This is the first step. No one can expect to be reconciled to God who does not at once cease doing what he knows to be wrong.

17. "Learn to do well." After ceasing to do evil, men must begin to do that which they know to be right. This is to prove their sincerity. Note how practical the message. The prophet has no faith in professions which are not carried out into every-day life. "Isaiah's conscience was perfect, because it was twofold: he felt that God is holy; God is practical. If there be the glory, the purity as of fire, of His Presence to overawe, there is His unceasing inspection of us, there is His interest in the smallest details of our life."

18. "Come now," etc. One of the most cheering passages in the Bible; as true for the repentant sinner now as for the Israelite in the eighth century before Christ. "Reason." An appeal is made to intelligence, to common sense.

19. The reward of following the advice and listening to the appeal just made. As is almost always the case in the Old Testament, temporal rewards are mentioned.

20. The opposite of the preceding verse. "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." The message is from the Lord, the prophet is but His mouthpiece.

TOPIC FOR ELEVENTH MONTH TWENTIETH.

HOW TO EXPRESS OUR THANKS TO GOD.

Ps. 138: 1-8.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 14.—For family blessings. 2 Sam. 7: 18, 19.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 15.—For revivals. Ezra 9: 8, 9.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 16.—For deliverance. Ps. 18: 6-17.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 17.—For happiness. Ps. 92: 1-4.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 18.—For salvation. Ps. 98: 1-3.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 19.—For a chance to work. 1 Tim. 1: 12-17.

The giving of thanks to God for the first harvest gathered by the Plymouth colonists almost three hundred years ago, was characteristic of these self-exiled seekers for religious freedom. How much it had to do with the first proclamation of a national "day of public thanksgiving and prayer," by President Washington, in January, 1795, cannot perhaps be accurately determined; but it is good to know that, in these early days of colonial and national history, our forefathers were desirous of keeping the fear and knowledge of God before their eyes.

This first national Thanksgiving Day was set for "Thursday, the 19th day of February" of the year 1795, and Washington recommended it to "all religious societies and denominations, and to all persons whomsoever within the United States" as a day "to meet together and render sincere and hearty thanks to the great Ruler of nations for the manifold and signal mercies which distinguish our lot as a nation."

Other nations have given us other days of solemn or joyful observance, as Christmas, Easter and the New Year festival; but to the non-Christian citizens of our land the first two do not appeal, while there are some among us who observe different chronologies. But the Thanksgiving proclamation is addressed to all citizens and sojourners in our land, making that day the one religious festival common to all who worship God. For many years chiefly a local observance, it has been in form since 1862, and for the decades since the war, largely in fact a day of national observance.

We need not shut our eyes to existing imperfections, but we would be ungrateful, indeed, if we could not recognize "signal and distinguishing" mercies to our land. Her perils have often been exploited and must still be considered, doubtless, but the better strength to meet them will arise from a recognition of what has been achieved. Material advancement is indicated by the increase of nearly 90 per cent. in the horse-power developed by American machinery from 1890 to 1900.

Some of the most dreaded diseases of the past century, as small-pox, consumption and diphtheria, are better controlled and may even be banished by men learning how God conditioned human life.

Educational progress is represented by more than 17,000,000 school children, and 140,000 college and university students.

An increase of 2,200 ministers, 2,700 churches and almost a half million members from 1902 to 1903 is proof that vital force still inheres in the Church.

These things mean that the material is coming more and more to subserve intellectual and the spiritual,—that man is realizing the dominion for which he was created, and so long as right recognition is made of these facts and of God's hand in them, we can expect Him still to open up His treasures more and more until the coming of One to whom death shall indeed be subject, and Who will usher in the eternal Thanksgiving.

DR. DE VOL IN THE HOME-LAND.

DAMASCUS, OHIO, Tenth month 19, 1904.

It is with praise to our Heavenly Father that we are able to report to our dear friends a prosperous voyage and a safe arrival at home.

We started from Shanghai on the 7th of Ninth month, during the typhoon season, and from Yokohama were for five days in a very severe wind storm. Aside from this, the trip by sea was all that could be desired. There were a series of incidents which seemed to us indications of our Father's love in preparing all the way for His children.

In the first place, in passing through Shanghai we had the pleasure of meeting Charles H. Stalker and wife, who were on their way round the world, making an evangelistic tour. It was refreshing to meet them, and, being so recently with our dear friends in India, we should have been sorry to have missed them. We have reason to hope that their visit will be blessed to our work, even more than his visit three years ago.

At Nagasaki, where we stopped to coal, we were delighted to meet Abbie Dresser and daughter, two of our intimate friends from Nanking. They had come to Japan for a few weeks during the hot weather and were now on their way home. It is a great joy to meet friends in a foreign port, especially so when quite unexpected.

At Yokohama another treat awaited us. We had hoped to take a trip up to Tokyo any way to see our friends, but as soon as we came to anchor we were welcomed by Elizabeth Binford, who came out on the launch to meet us. She escorted us up to the Mission, where we were cordially received. The next day we were able to see very much that was of interest to us. We visited the Red Cross Hospital, where between three and four thousand Japanese sick and wounded soldiers were being cared for. A vivid testimony to us of the horrors of war. We were glad to see the new Mission Home and school buildings, a great improvement upon the former buildings which were burned. The work that is being done is splendid. God gave us a message for the young women at the chapel exercise, Kai Fu, our old Earlham College friend, kindly acting as interpreter. The day following, Gilbert Bowles and Elizabeth Binford accompanied us to Yokohama and saw us off.

It seems like a fairy tale, almost too good to be true, but still other blessings were in store for us. Our steamer was already three days late, owing to the enormous cargo that she had been taking along the way; the steamship "Korea," on the other hand, was a day early from San Francisco, the result being that the two ships came into harbor at Honolulu the same morning. Knowing that Esther Butler had thought of sailing by the "Korea," we went aboard as soon as we were in to make inquiry. One may hardly imagine how thankful we were to find not only the superintendent, but Effie Murray and a number of other Nanking missionaries. We had from noon until five p. m. together, a sufficient time to talk over a number of important matters, which we could not have done by correspondence. It was a most enjoyable meeting and as profitable as it was unpremeditated.

Six days more brought us to San Francisco, where we were kindly met by Mary Wood, and as if to make perfect our eventful journey, we found Elizabeth Jenkins, from Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, who had gone West in company with Esther Butler, about to return home via St. Louis and Chicago. After a day or so of rest at the Sunshine Mission, meeting many dear friends who seemed deeply interested in our work in China, we set out for the East. The journey across the continent, which otherwise might have been somewhat irksome, after our long sea voyage, was made both pleasant and profitable by the company of our president. We reached home on the morning of the 13th in health, and rejoicing in the love and care of our Father.

It is blessed to know that we are in harmony with God's plan, and each manifestation of his care makes it easier to trust for the next.

In Christian love,

GEORGE F. DEVOL.

He who would meet the need of the church must know what it is.

At no epoch have the exterior conditions which man has made for himself by his industry or his knowledge, been able to exempt from care for the state of his inner life. The face of the world alters around us, its intellectual and material factors vary; and no one can arrest these changes, whose suddenness is sometimes not short of perilous. But the important thing is that at the center of shifting circumstance man should remain man, live his life, make toward his goal. And whatever be his road, to make toward his goal, the traveler must not lose himself in cross-ways, nor hamper his movements with useless burdens. Let him heed well his direction and forces, and keep good faith; and that he may the better devote himself to the essential—which is to progress—at whatever sacrifice, let him simplify his baggage.—Charles Wagner.

Correspondence.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

There appears to be some misunderstanding as to the relation Kansas Yearly Meeting bears to the work of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions in Cuba. I have received a printed statement issued by Indiana Yearly Meeting, which refers to the action of other Yearly Meetings, and as the question seems to be one in which all the Yearly Meetings are interested, I think it best to make a statement through THE AMERICAN FRIEND in regard to the matter.

Prior to the year 1901 the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions was practically a voluntary association of members nominated by the various Yearly Meetings without any financial responsibility being attached to such nominations. When the proposition was made for the Board to undertake the work in Cuba, the members of the Board for Kansas Yearly Meeting, myself and Hannah E. Sleeper, since deceased, felt it our duty to notify the Executive Committee of the Board that we were not authorized by Kansas Yearly Meeting to take any action which would involve it in accepting any financial responsibility for the work in Cuba, as Kansas Yearly Meeting did not feel able to do more than carry on the work it was then doing in Alaska.

When the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions was incorporated, we were requested to sign as incorporators, but did so still with the understanding that our Yearly Meeting was to assume no financial responsibility. When the Board met at Indianapolis during the time of the Five Years' Meeting, we hardly understood what our status was and did not act as members of the Board until we were assured that the Board desired us to counsel with them, although they understood that Kansas Yearly Meeting had not undertaken to bear any of the burden of the Cuban Mission.

In the circular from Indiana Yearly Meeting above referred to, the figures as given imply that Kansas Yearly Meeting is morally bound to pay a large proportion of the expenses of the Mission in Cuba, and it seems to be the decision of Indiana Yearly Meeting not to continue to contribute the amounts that it has been doing to that work, unless other Yearly Meetings contribute on the basis that is shown in the circular. This circular fails to mention Kansas Yearly Meeting among the list of those meetings, which are carrying on an independent work. Kansas Yearly Meeting has carried on an independent work in Alaska since 1887, and, as stated above, gave formal notice to the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions that it could not become responsible for any portion of the work in Cuba.

The circular from Indiana states, "The principle of apportionment according to membership was used by the Five Years' Meeting as an equitable basis for division of expenses among the Yearly Meetings." It is possible that an apportionment according to membership is the only available basis for dividing the actual expenses of the Five Years' Meeting, but it does not seem to be a fair basis for the division of voluntary contributions. I am not in possession of information that would enable me to decide what would be a fair basis of apportionment, but it will surely be admitted by any fair-minded person that some meetings can afford to pay much more proportionally to their membership than others. The work of the associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs has been carried on for years, and Kansas Yearly Meeting has paid very much less towards this work than other Yearly Meetings whose membership was much smaller than that of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

The amount that can be raised for charitable purposes does not depend solely on the question of wealth, but also on the habitual feeling in regard to the power to give. Kansas Yearly Meeting has been heavily taxed in recent years in taking care of the Friend's University, and so far as my knowledge of its membership and their financial condition extends, I regard its contributions to foreign missions as liberal under the circumstances.

Thine truly,

FRANCIS A. WRIGHT.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Marion Reisinger and wife are holding meetings at Vera, I. T.

Dr. Edward C. Young's address is now Steubenville, Ohio, R. F. D., No. 2.

Walter S. Aldrich has been assisting James Renfrew in revival work at Monkton Ridge, Vt.

Mead A. Kelsey has entered upon his fourth year of service as pastor in Swansea Meeting, Somerset, Mass.

Mary Jane Weaver has been holding special evangelistic meetings at Perry City, N. Y., within the limits of Scipio Quarterly Meeting.

The Christian Endeavor Society, Paoli, Ind., has just purchased a missionary library, and under the direction of the pastor are now making a study of the Book of Genesis.

Blue River Quarterly Meeting was held at Paoli, Ind., the 29th and 30th ult. Clark Brown, of Plainfield, Ind., was acceptably present both days, and gave a missionary address Sabbath evening.

During the Seventh and Eighth months, while it was extremely hot, the average attendance in New York Twentieth Street Meeting was 35. This at first seems small, but the churches of other denominations in the vicinity were closed.

Friends of New England had a carriage built at Amesbury, Mass., for the use of their mission at Ramallah, Palestine. It was shipped from Boston, Tenth month 29th. This will be a very welcome addition to the equipment of the mission.

In the last paragraph of the summary of the pastoral situation in New York Yearly Meeting, we reported one minister "caring for two meetings, fifteen not yet recorded." This is incorrect. It should read one minister "caring for two meetings who is not yet remunerated."

At "The Oneida," in Glens Falls Quarter, N. Y., meetings have been well attended. A new platform in front of the meeting house, and repairs to the horse shed, with other improvements, show the renewal of interest at this point where in former years great work was wrought for God.

New York Quarterly Meeting, held the 26th and 27th ult., was a season of spiritual uplifting. Eight ministers were in attendance. "The Personality of the Gospel Message," "The Power of the Divine Life" and "The Presence of the Holy Spirit" were the leading thoughts engaging the meeting for worship.

About forty children attended Marlborough Monthly Meeting, which was held at Tillson, N. Y., Tenth month 29th. Several of them offered intelligent and deeply spiritual prayers during the first half hour. This feature was made possible by the faithful work among the Junior Endeavorers, who are carefully instructed. Dinner was served to more than one hundred.

"Old Wabash" Meeting has put in a new heating plant, improving materially the appearance of the audience room, making the meeting house a very pleasant and attractive place for worship. The large cemetery has been improved and is well kept. This meeting, having a membership of aggressive and prosperous farmers, is very inviting to those wishing to locate in a Friends' farming locality in Indiana.

Marion Reisinger and wife visited the mission at Hillside, Indian Territory, just after the close of Kansas Yearly Meeting. They held fifteen meetings, in which 13 professed conversion, and 1 claimed to be renewed. The school at Hillside is prosperous. The present enrollment being 81, 39 of which are Indians, mostly Cherokees. The interest and average attendance is better than last year. Annie M. Ray has returned to Hillside for another year's pastoral work.

Cornwall Quarterly Meeting was held at Clintondale, N. Y., Tenth month 20th. The perfect autumn weather, the large attendance and excellent program combined, under the blessing of God, in making it a memorable occasion. A. J. Weaver, of Glens Falls, gave four lectures and one inspiring sermon. David S. Taber, of New York, reviewed the "Early History of Friends." These church extension lectures were much appreciated, and courses of lectures may be arranged the coming winter.

At Butternuts Quarterly Meeting, held at West Branch, N. Y., there was a large attendance. Carolina M. Wood gave two lantern lectures, one upon Mexico and one upon Norway. Enthusiastic meetings were held in behalf of Temperance, Bible School, and Christian Endeavor. Meals, dinner and supper, were served in the "minister's home," to all who cared to partake. This important field is in need of a Friend minister. First-day evening the Methodist Episcopal preacher at Ava, N. Y., a few miles away, gave up his service, and came with a number of his congregation to worship with Friends.

A conference of workers was held at Woodland, Wayne County, N. C., Tenth month 21st and 22d, in connection with Contentnea Quarterly Meeting, in which Mary E. Cartland, Ada E. Lee and Jabez R. Mendenhall, of Greensboro Monthly Meeting, and Eli Reece, of High Point Monthly Meeting, rendered excellent service. They spoke on the development of the ministry, revival work, finance, Sabbath school work and foreign mission work and organization. The Quarterly Meeting was one of especial interest. The Committee of Ministry and Oversight that had been appointed at a previous meeting to consider the propriety of recording Whitford Edgerton, a minister of the Gospel, reported favorable. On Seventh-day the committees were appointed to carry forward the different lines of work during the year. George and Julia Moore were reappointed as clerks. On First-day, at 11 o'clock, Eli Reece preached a very practical sermon and Mary Cartland at night.

In a recent letter from San Francisco, Cal., Caleb J. Jenkins says: "It may interest thee to know that I have come to this city to labor among Friends as 'pastor,' being the first called to this service in this place. The meeting is small, having less than 50 members and only 25 resident in city and nearby, but the meetings for worship are refreshingly in the life and power of the Spirit and the mission work is a joy to the heart of any Christian whose thought favors an evangelistic movement. Friends are here conducting one of the 'livest' missions in the city, with meetings every night, preceded by an open air service of half an hour. The 'running fire' of testimony each evening is remarkable for its spontaneity and freshness. Usually, not less than a score of testimonies are heard and at times many more than that. Conversions are frequent, and in many cases the marks of regeneration are very clear. R. Esther Smith is the faithful superintendent of the mission. Any Friends from the East who may be traveling through California would do well to tarry in San Francisco long enough to observe this work. The Mission is located at the corner of Fourth and Howard streets, in the basement, and Sunshine Hall, where Friends worship, is at 930½ Harrison street, which is also the address of the superintendent.

BORN.

BUTLER.—To Josiah and Marie S. Butler, Barclay, Kan., Tenth month 15th, 1904, a son, John Austin.

DIED.

GARBUTT.—At her home, near Middleport, N. Y., Tenth month 16th, 1904, Eliza J. Garbutt, wife of James Garbutt, and daughter of Kendra and Ruth Robson (deceased), in the 57th year of her age. She was a lifelong Friend and member of Hartland Monthly Meeting. Earnest in Christian service, she died with the full assurance of a blessed immortality.

JESSUP.—At the home of her son, Indianapolis, Ind., Tenth month 5th, 1904, Malinda Kellum Jessup, widow of Jackson L. Jessup, and daughter of Jesse and Sarah Kellum, in her 78th year.

PRITCHARD.—At Kokomo, Ind., Tenth month 28th, 1904, Calvin Andrew Pritchard, infant son of Dr. William H. Pritchard.

SCHOONOVEN.—At the home of his parents, Stanfordville, N. Y., Ninth month 3d, after a brief illness, Henry Schoonoven, aged 21 years. He was a member of Stanford Monthly Meeting, and although employed away from home, always identified himself with Christian people. For several months he had spent his evenings in mission work with the "Volunteers of America," in the city of Brooklyn.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

IN A RESTAURANT.

A physician puts the query: Have you never noticed in any large restaurant at lunch or dinner time the large number of hearty, vigorous old men at the tables; men whose ages run from sixty to eighty years; many of them bald and all perhaps gray, but none of them feeble or senile?

Perhaps the spectacle is so common as to have escaped your observation or comment, but nevertheless it is an object lesson which means something.

If you will notice what these hearty old fellows are eating, you will observe that they are not munching bran crackers nor gingerly picking their way through a menu card of new fangled health foods; on the contrary they seem to prefer a juicy roast of beef, a properly turned loin of mutton, and even the deadly broiled lobster is not altogether ignored.

The point of all this is that a vigorous old age depends upon good digestion and plenty of wholesome food and not dieting and an endeavor to live upon bran crackers.

There is a certain class of food cranks who seem to believe that meat, coffee and many other good things are rank poisons, but these cadaverous sickly looking individuals are a walking condemnation of their own theories.

The matter in a nutshell is that if the stomach secretes the natural digestive juices in sufficient quantity, any wholesome food will be promptly digested; if the stomach does not do so, and certain foods cause distress, one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal will remove all difficulty, because they supply just what every weak stomach lacks, pepsin, hydro-chloric acid, diastase and nux.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do not act upon the bowels and in fact are not strictly a medicine, as they act almost entirely upon the food eaten, digesting it thoroughly and thus giving the stomach a much needed rest and an appetite for the next meal.

Of people who travel, nine out of ten use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, knowing them to be perfectly safe to use at any time and also having found out by experience that they are a safeguard against indigestion in any form, and eating as they have to, at all hours and all kinds of food, the traveling public for years have pinned their faith to Stuart's Tablets.

All druggists sell them at 50 cents for full-sized packages and any druggist from Maine to California, if his opinion were asked, will say that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the most popular and successful remedy for any stomach trouble.

Evidences of a revival in business are afforded in the government's fiscal statement for Tenth month. Customs receipts were $1,400,000 larger than for the month last year.

The government of the province of Shantung, China, has commissioned a scholarly mandarin, who is descended from Confucius, to write a book on Christianity, explaining what it is and what it is good for.

The state department at Washington received a cablegram from the American embassy at St. Petersburg last week which warrants it in the assumption that the Russian government will soon agree to recognize passports of American Jews traveling in Russia.

Cotton mills in New England employing about 10,000 operatives, which either were shut down or running on short time for several months, went on full-time schedule last week. The change was made possible by a weakening cotton market together with a more general inquiry for leading grades of goods.

The estimates of the war department for the fiscal year ending Sixth month 30, 1906, aggregate $103,686,780. This is $22,242,612 less than the estimates submitted a year ago, and $3,832,388 less than the total appropriations made for the use of the war department for the current fiscal year ending Sixth month 30, 1905.

John Morley, the English Liberal leader, addressed the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg, Pa., one day last week. After saying, "Whether Democracy will make for peace, we all have yet to see," he continued: "Bright signs shine on the horizons of our time. Strenuous efforts are being made to improve that body of accepted usages and regulations which we call international law. The progress of arbitration, though the impatient may find it slow, is very real, and considering the impediments it is extraordinary. The

WINTER RESORTS OF THE SOUTH REACHED BY THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

The Southern Railway announces the sale of round-trip Winter Excursion tickets, with stop-over privileges, to all the principal resorts of the South, beginning October 15th, 1904.

The winter resorts of North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida are especially inviting to those in search of health or pleasure. In these States are such noted resorts as Pinehurst and Asheville, N. C. Camden, Aiken, Summerville and Charleston, S. C. Augusta, Savannah, Brunswick, Jekyll Island and Thomasville, Ga. Jacksonville, St. Augustine, Ormond, Daytona, Palm Beach, Rockledge, Miami and Tampa, Fla.; also the resorts of Porto Rico and Cuba are best reached via Southern Railway.

Tickets on sale up to and including April 30th, 1905, limited to return until May 31st, 1905.

Winter tourist tickets are also on sale to the noted resorts of the Gulf Coast, Mobile, New Orleans, Texas, Mexico, New Mexico, Arizona and California.

The Southern Railway now has greatly improved facilities, having completed a considerable portion of its double track road, and the completion of the new double track bridge over the Potomac River at Washington also expedites the movements of its trains.

Elegant vestibuled trains with the latest Pullman drawing-room sleeping cars are operated through between Eastern cities and the Southern resorts. The very best dining car service, and everything for the comfort and pleasure of its patrons.

The route of the "Washington and Southwestern Limited," "Palm Limited" and the "Sunset Limited."

A SILENT PILOT.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purposes.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

God says, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," yet thousands give their youth and strength to revelry, foolishness and sin, and then come, broken in body and mind, calling "Lord, Lord!"

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

SOCIAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD

Studies in Human and Divine Inter-Relationship

BY

RUFUS M. JONES, A. M., Litt. D.

PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN HAVERFORD COLLEGE

This is a fresh interpretation of the deepest problems of life. It is a book for the times, and will come to many as a message of help. The author turns to the service of religion the great gains which have been won by recent investigations in psychology. He tells in straightforward and untechnical language what it means to be a person. He points out that to be a person one must be bound up in organic relation with many persons, and step by step he reaches the discovery that this social relationship stretches from earth to heaven—that God and man are also bound together in organic relationship. He shows how the search for God reveals this. How the great mystics have realized it, how the movement of Quakerism illustrates it, how both Faith and Reason unite to proclaim it, and finally how the New Testament confirms this central idea of the Divine-Human life. The book is full of optimism and good cheer, and it will help the seeker to find the path home. It contains the following chapters:

Introduction; The Quest; The Meaning of Personality; The Realization of Persons; Self-Sacrifice; The Subconscious Life; The Testimony of Mysticism; The Inner Light; The Test of Spiritual Guidance; Faith as a Pathway to Reality; The Self and the Over-Self; The Divine-Human Life.

The Power of an Ideal

“Few beliefs are more fundamentally untrue than the belief, often strangely prevalent, that an exalted ideal is an unpractical thing. It would be far nearer the truth to say that there is nothing on earth which can compare, in practical effectiveness, with a great ideal genuinely held.”

THE CHASM OF SIN.*

LAST WEEK the fact of sin was treated and the cure of sin was indicated. But there is a deeper aspect to sin than was there touched upon. That it spoils the sinner's life we all recognize, that it leads to slavery is everywhere admitted, that there is no cure short of deliverance from it is a certainty. But there is more. That deeper aspect is this: Sin separates from God. It puts a chasm between the sinner and Him who is sinned against. It is the only thing which can separate us but it does. But the separation is caused not by God's withdrawal, but by our withdrawal from Him. To change the figure, it is like an eclipse of the moon. The moon's light is shining on through the whole eclipse, but we fail to see it, because the earth's shadow lies between us and the moon's light. So long as we look up through that shadow we miss the orb of light. The sinner who looks at God through the shadow of his own sin cannot see the true face, cannot cry "Abba, Father." The warmth and tenderness vanish. God seems far away and stern toward him.

The same thing happens in our relations with men. As soon as we have injured a person—treated him unfairly, hurt him in any way—a chasm at once opens between our lives. We dislike to meet him. We do all we can to avoid him. We read our injury into his entire attitude toward us. We feel sure that he hates us and means to get even with us. We lose our sense of comfort in his presence and a complete change comes over all our dealings with that man, simply because our injury to him lies there in between us. Whether he has really changed or not toward us, we are sadly conscious that things are wrong and we feel that our guilt has affected him and his feeling toward us.

This feeling is a universal human experience. Little children often present an illustration of it. Some child has disobeyed his father, perhaps for the first time, consciously and wilfully. When he begins to think of meeting his father he grows very uncomfortable. It is not punishment he is afraid of; he knows nothing about that yet. He is conscious of wrong-doing and it has made a chasm come between himself and his father. He reads his father's attitude toward him through the shadow of his own wrong act. He can no longer approach him with the old time joy and confidence. That deed has set them apart.

What does the little fellow do? He instinctively feels the need of some sacrifice. He acts out his sorrow in his own childlike way. He goes and breaks open his bank and comes to his father with his pennies. Or he brings in his hand some other precious thing and puts it down by his father, as a silent witness to his troubled inward condition. He wants the gap closed and he feels that it will cost something to get it closed.

That is human nature. That idea is rooted in man wherever he is found. He is conscious that sin separates and he feels that something—something costly and precious—is necessary before the harmony and free, sweet intercourse can be restored. Sacrifice is one of the deepest and most permanent facts of life. Its origin is far back of history. It is as old as smiling or weeping. Man cannot think of his sin, without thinking of this separation and changed attitude. Then he tries the child's method of giving up what is dear to him in order to win back the lost fellowship. Every tribe and nation has added a chapter to this story of man's efforts to square the account. Now the Gospel must be read in the light of this immemorial fact of sacrifice. Its marvelous truth shines out like a newly-risen sun. Everywhere else is the story of man's effort to bridge the chasm which his sin has made. Here we discover that the original movement to close the gap comes from God. It can be closed only by a love which reaches across and links both sides together again. God meets this long human groping, this universal sense of the need of sacrifice, of the cost of sin which is no fiction, no dream. He meets it and raises it to its fullest meaning. What man hoped to do, but could not, with his bleating lamb and timid dove, God Himself has done. He has reached across the chasm, at the cost of cross and blood, to say to the sinner that the only obstruction lies in him. He has swept away the shadow which eclipsed His face and He has shown that a bridge of love stretches from Divine heart to human heart.

THE ELECTION.

NOT SINCE 1872 has there been such a one-sided political contest as that which has resulted in the election of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States. His electoral majority will be 210, and his popular majority will probably reach 2,500,000, which is by far the greatest ever given to any man in this country.

There are very strong and admirable qualities in the man who has been chosen to be the head of this great nation. He has grown wiser as he has matured under heavy responsibilities. He has been slowly developing a larger view of the responsibility of America in the maintenance of the peace of the world. He has by his side in the State Department one of the wisest and solidest men in the cabinet of any country and we shall expect, now that the highest goal of the President's political ambition is reached, a four years' period of safe and solid statesmanship.

But while on general lines expressing our confidence in the future, we sincerely regret that the Republican victory is so overwhelming. There has never been a time in our history when an efficient and vigorous opposition party was more needed. The landslide of this successful party has swept some very dangerous men into office, and the lack of balance and the absence of any fear of defeat encourage the worst politicians to push to the front. Pennsylvania, where a Republican nomination generally means an election, is a standing illustration of the dangers of easy victories at the polls.

It is now impossible to foresee how an opposition party is to be organized on right lines to prove a weighty opponent to the party at present so easily victorious. The opposition in the present campaign failed to plant themselves so squarely on some vital issue as to strike the interest and attention and moral spirit of all sections of the country. There was no commanding call that appealed to the rank and file of the nation.

The country needs particularly the formation of a great opposition party centered about some living moral principle and headed by men of commanding wisdom and power. The Prohibition party has stood valiantly and persistently for a great moral issue, and in this campaign it rolled up nearly 400,000 votes. But during its thirty years of history it has so far failed to draw to its ranks the great host of voters which would make it one of the deciding forces in all the political moves of the country. Its leaders still look forward with hope, and labor with patience, but other issues get the votes.

The time is certainly coming when serious men will arouse themselves to correct abuses and wrongs which are now safely entrenched in many a State and city, where easy political victory has removed all fear, and where civic ideals are well nigh dead. Sometime we shall go to the polls swept along by a great ground-swell of moral purpose. But when?

EDITORIAL NOTE.

WE HAVE received an attractive little book by Chauncey J. Hawkins, on "The Mind of Whittier." (Published by Thomas Whittaker, New York.) It deals with the fundamental religious ideas of Whittier—such ideas as the "Inner Light," his conception of Christ, his optimism, his love of humanity, and his attitude toward a future life. The spirit of the book is excellent, and it will be a helpful introduction to many who have not found their way already into the life and spirit and beauties of this great religious teacher. The present book has a somewhat too ambitious title. It only touches the edge of Whittier's mind and religion—the deeps lie beyond, but that makes it all the better for those who want an introduction. It is a serious mistake, however, to have omitted the titles of the many poems from which quotations are made.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN IMAGE.

BY DELIA REES.

"Surely every man walketh in an image," wrote one of the old prophets of Israel, who had taken life seriously and found it altogether too much for his strength and wisdom. Its conflicts were bitter, its storms fierce and they had gotten the better of his highest hopes and noblest purposes time and again until he felt himself to be like an empty vessel tossed meaninglessly on a wild sea. His own hand could no longer steer its course; he had no strength against the mighty counter-currents of life. He was a mere toy played with and utterly baffled by forces stronger than himself. He tried to be good, and set himself to indulge no sin, but in his strenuous efforts he withheld himself from good; his peace was gone and his sorrow was stirred. He thought over it all, his hopes, his defeats, and what did life mean anyway until his heart grew hot within him. Still he mused and the fire burned, until slowly and surely there was evolved from the inner conflict this great heart-lesson.

Then he broke silence and spoke, but not to men, nor yet to his own heart, for wisdom was dawning. He prayed, Lord, make me to know mine end and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am. His little work! What does it amount to now? And his days! Ah, how short they are as he thinks of God and His everlastingness. His own age ever seems as nothing in duration under this new light, and man at his best is an empty, vain thing. The prophet's thought sweeps out and on over the passing generations of earth with their empty occupations of time and self—what a vain thing to live if this were all! Still he prays, voicing to his God this dawning wisdom in his soul. "Surely every man walketh in an image." This life is a reflection of the real, wonderful ray of light, this falling across a black and troubled sea. And this gleam was no less real because for one brief moment only it lighted up the present and future and no less divine, because the prayer lapsed again into a pitiful cry that saw nothing beyond the dark night of death. How much of our light comes to us in just the same way—a gleam, a momentary ray lighting our darkness and revealing the real, the eternal. And we, too, pray and then lapse from the vision and grope our way in the darkness of material things and the interests that are of this world only.

Surely every man walketh in an image. Yes, and the pity of it all is that we do not know the image from the real. Blinded by the image we do not see the real. Our children go to the kindergarten and play with pretty bits of paper and colored threads, and bring their little designs home to us. They take sand and water and make little continents, and with sticks and twigs and rocks they build mountains and grow trees and build cities. They take cereals and buy and sell and play themselves into the world of life and business that comes a few years hence. They build themselves into the homes of the future by means of these little images of what we call the real. Only play, yes, but these little fellows are learning life in the play; and while they get tremendously interested in the play they do not long miss the lesson. They early learn that these are but images of the real life which they must meet later. While he plays, the boy is discovering his own tastes and mentally determining what he will do in the real as a man, and the little girl dreams chastely and fondly of her future home and family; while she holds her doll in arms the mind and purpose of the future mother is unfolding. Dolls for children, and goods-boxes for houses, and broken dishes and stools for furnishings, are all very interesting for now, but the child unconsciously lays hold of the future and real which the image represents. We are all children grown large in body only. We too, walk in an image—a reflection of the real, the eternal. We eat and drink and sleep and walk, we laugh and cry, are gay and sad, we buy and sell, we labor and carry burdens until our bodies are bent and we think all this is reality. We clothe our bodies and train our minds as if they would stay here forever. We even build our meeting houses and go through with our forms of religion, and worship as if we were fixtures and God must needs be happy that we stop in our wonderful existence to recognize Him. We utterly forget what Paul learned so effectively, that the fashion of this world passeth away. This world, beautiful and interesting as it is, and life here with its lovely and fascinating possibilities, are but images of the real world in which God rules and of the character which is eternal. If there is any meaning at all in Christianity, Jesus Christ came to show us that earthly fathers at their best are but images of the Heavenly Father, who, though unseen, loves us all and asks for our confidence. That the flowers, the grass, the trees, the sun, the rain, the home, the mother-love, the everything lovely and good in this life are but images of that real life hidden with God in the great eternity that lies all about us and is yet unseen by us. Christ used the world as an image of the real—the seen was to Him always a suggestion of the unseen.

To Paul the visible world, the material was temporal. The fashion of this world passeth, the reality is eternal and is unseen to the material vision. When will we get this view of life and of reality? When character becomes more to us than religious forms or creeds or organizations. When the man is of greater worth than his possessions, when people are of greater value than things, when living means the finding out what one is here for and fulfilling that purpose; then shall we begin to know that we walk in an image and that our real life is a hidden one—hidden because spiritual, because its centre and source lies in the union of our wills with His will. Real life is always hidden in God.

THE CONTINUITY OF SERVICE.

BY C. A. SALMOND.

"One soweth and another reapeth." This is a common law of human experience, which has sometimes a vexing side. One of the old prophets gives to it, indeed, a retributive application, when he says to the faithless and selfish in Israel, "Thou shalt sow, but thou shalt not reap" (Micah 6: 15). But the law holds almost as a necessity of our brief passing existence on earth, that much of the sowing men do is reaped by others and not by themselves. Now, rightly regarded, this may be an inspiring, rather than a depressing or paralysing consideration. It should quicken in us the sense alike of gratitude and of responsibility.

Let us observe, first, how the law has wrought for us, in those who have gone before us. They sowed much from which they were not permitted to reap. But the benefit is ours to-day. The present is in a real sense the heritage, the harvest of the past. Each generation owes a large indebtedness to the generations which have gone before it, and the debt grows larger, in many ways, as time goes on. The greatness of our obligation is certainly not limited by the sense of it which we carry about with us from day to day.

The country we live in—who can estimate how much we owe, even in respect of the material comfort it affords, to unknown, unnamed laborers, who lived their day, and did their work, and passed away. As one of our latter-day prophets was never tired of reminding us, "It is all work and forgotten work, this peopled, clothed, articulate-speaking, high-towered, wide-acred world. . . . I tell thee, they had not a hammer to begin with, and yet Wren built St. Paul's." There have been many brains in sleep and many fingers at work between the time when our rude forefathers, in a half savage Caledonia, devised some coarse and clumsy crossing over a stream too wide for the log of a tree to compass, and the time when our great Firth of Forth was spanned by the giant structure, which for strength and symmetry and scientific adjustment is one of the engineering marvels of the age. But the same holds true of the most ordinary appliances that contribute to the sum of our outward comfort and happiness. In point of fact, we may find illustrated everywhere, in things common as well as rare, small as well as great, the principle of human progress by succession—which distinguishes us from the brute creation—one man or set of men laboring, and others entering upon their labors, to gather up their results and carry them onward, somewhat nearer, it is hoped, to the goal of perfectness.

In every department of national life—in commerce, in war, in science, in the world of philosophic thought—how much we owe to men of the past, many of whom had but mute recognition in their own day, and absolutely no reward. Columbus discovers America, but the new continent gets to be known by another man's name. John Watt experiments with his mother's tea-kettle, and by and by invents the steam engine; but it is others who make out of it colossal fortunes, counting themselves generous even to talk of erecting a monument somewhere to his memory. David Livingstone gives his life to the exploration of Dark Africa; and how many of the comfortable Britons now "interested in Africa" (financially) even think, I wonder, of David Livingstone? It often happens in this world that the victor does not himself enjoy the fruits of victory, that the discoverer has no personal recompense for his discovery, that the inventor leaves others to gather in the golden harvest from his invention. But what matters it, after all? Who with any sense for moral magnitudes would not rather be a Watt than a railway king, a Livingstone than a mine owner, even with the amplest supply of Chinese or any other labor at command? Such men "in their own generation served the counsel of God" (Acts 13: 36, R. V.), and in proportion as the after ages go on reaping benefit from them, they have that high reward of which they were most ambitious, and of which rapacity never can despoil them.

In the history of the church, the same principle has been manifestly operative. How much the prophets owed under God to the patriarchs! What a debt the apostles owed to the prophets, and all succeeding ages of the church to the glorious company of the apostles and martyrs in their turn! And who can compute what any section of the church owes to the fathers who lived and wrought and suffered in faith, whether on the home or on the foreign field, and are now fallen asleep in Jesus? Nay, even narrowing the view to the limits of our own personal life and experience, what reason have we—in our homes, in our business position, in our congregational relationships, in the very church buildings we worship in—to be thankful to those whom it may no longer be within our power to thank. For what they sowed, it is now ours to reap.

Along with gratitude, however, such considerations should stir in us something else—namely, a sense of present, personal responsibility. We have inherited the past; but we too have our heirlooms to hand on to those who are coming after us. If the present is the harvest of the past, the future will be no less the harvest of the present; and to that harvest we are preparing some contribution. Let us not speak regretfully of the good old days, but seek to make these new days good—to make each successive new day granted to us as good as ever we can. We are not to cast wistful glances toward some far off field of opportunity which God has not intended for us, but to seek to do our duty here, as well as now, just in the place and time appointed for us by Him. Only thus shall we be worthy successors of those who have gone before us, as we continually recognize that, in new circumstances, which in a measure alter cases, we have entered into their labors, with a commission of our own, following upon theirs and kindred and essential to it, the right discharge of which will be our offering of service to the everlasting King.

Let us remind ourselves that much as those who went before us may have achieved, their work without ours is not complete; while, much as those who are coming on may be expected to accomplish, the labors and successes of the future will not be adequately prepared for, if we do not act worthily our part. We have our place to fill and function to perform as those who are privileged to live, in our own particular community, and at this precise epoch in the world's history. And if we are Christians—men and women looking to Christ, trusting in Christ, loving Christ, trying to serve Christ—we may draw constant inspiration from the remembrance that we are members of a glorious evangelical succession.

In one of the old Psalms, it is said, "Man goeth forth unto his work and to his labors until the evening." That was true of the Man Christ Jesus, the Son of the living God. In His youth, as a journeyman carpenter, He did His daily work for a living wage; and His brief day on earth was a day of labor until the early evening closed. Would that we might all live more in the spirit of the Master! "My meat and My drink," He said, "is to do the work of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work." What satisfaction this sense of vocation—of a high and holy and heavenly calling—would bring to us in our daily life. "The will of Him that sent me" would guide and hallow and uplift all the humblest tasks and commonest employments of each succeeding day, and give them their own significance as the filling in of some needed though little part of a great God-directed plan.

We may be called to sow, as those who are not personally to reap. But it should be our main concern to live while we live, in duty to the dead, in duty to the living, in duty to those who yet shall live—in mindfulness, above all, of our duty to Him who is the Lord of all, and who has both a creative and a redemptive right to the yoking of our energies to the fulfilment of His great and gracious design. Then, even if we are not permitted to see much present and palpable fruit of our labor, or are called aside or away, mayhap, when we feel that our work is only half completed, we may trust Him to secure results from it that will fill the heart with humble gratitude, in the great harvest home, when every faithful laborer will come into his own, and when he that sowed and he that reaped will rejoice together.

The International Lesson.

FOURTH QUARTER.

ELEVENTH MONTH 27, 1904.

LESSON IX.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Isaiah 28: 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—They also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way.—Isa. 28: 7.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 21.—World's temperance lesson. Isa. 28: 1-13.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 22.—The mocker. Prov. 20: 1-13.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 23.—Good counsel. Prov. 23: 15-25.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 24.—Woe to the drunkard. Isa. 5: 11-24.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 25.—God's punishment. Nahum 1: 1-10.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 26.—Danger of drink. Amos 6: 1-11.

First-day, Eleventh mo. 27.—Drunkards shut out. 1 Cor. 6: 1-11.

Time.—About 725 B. C.

Place.—Jerusalem, though the prophecy relates also to the northern kingdom.

Kings.—Hezekiah, king of Judah; Hoshea, king of Israel.

The third First-day in the Eleventh month has been set aside as "Temprance Sunday," and lessons have been chosen from which instruction may be given on the great theme of Temperance.

The twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah is one of the most striking in the book—in beauty of style, strength of statement, analysis of character and stern truthfulness it can hardly be surpassed.

The truths which it sets forth are just as applicable to the people and conditions of to-day, as they were to the men of Isaiah's own age. The state of affairs in Jerusalem led the prophet to denounce in very strong language the gross sins of his countrymen. He begins with a description of the sins of the people in the neighboring kingdom, and states what the result will be there. He finds a similar condition in Judah, and he uses similar language.

1. "Woe." A warning of the coming woe. "Ephraim." Put for the whole kingdom, because Ephraim was the chief tribe. "And to the fading flower of his glorious beauty," R. V. "Crown of pride." Probably refers to Samaria which was on a hill. Samaria was celebrated for its beauty. Note the picture of the effects of drunkenness.

2. "The Lord hath." God makes use of human instruments to carry out His plans. In this case He was to use the king of Assyria to bring punishment upon the inhabitants of Israel. The invasion is pictured in a series of strong similes.

3. The capital city of the drunkards will be trodden under foot. As an historical fact Samaria was turned into a heap of ruins.

4. A continuation of the description of the coming doom. "Hasty fruit." Better as in the Revised Version, "the first ripe fig." The early figs were considered a great delicacy, and were picked as soon as ripe. As Samaria was taken by the Assyrians in 722 B. C., these words must have been spoken two or three years earlier, that is about 725.

5, 6. "In that day." Notwithstanding the destruction there will be "a residue," a remnant, "who can and do abide" even that storm, to whom the Lord Himself shall be for a crown, "and for a spirit of justice to him that sitteth for justice." "Turn back the battle at the gate," R. V. This seems to be the best rendering. The idea then is, that they will be able to turn back the enemy even if he has reached the gate of their city. No matter how discouraging the condition there is always a door of hope.

7, 8. "But these also," R. V. The inhabitants of Judah. The prophet has brought up the inhabitants of Ephraim as an object lesson, and now turns upon his fellow-citizens and says that they are as bad. He names six points: (1) Erring through wine; (2) the priest and prophet—the ones who above all others should have set a good example have erred; (3) "They are swallowed up of wine," wine is their master; (4) "They err in vision," cannot see things as they really are; (5) "They stumble in judgment;" (6) "Filthiness," a well-known result of drunkenness.

9, 10. These verses are the reply of the accused persons to Isaiah's arraignment. Note the ill-concealed insolence of the words. "Whom will he make to understand the message? them that are weaned," etc.? R. V. Are we infants just weaned. "For it is precept upon precept," etc. Are we children that he should use platitudes upon platitudes, repetition upon repetition? The Hebrew words are short and simple, almost equivalent to our "a b c's."

11. Here begins Isaiah's reply: "Nay, but by men of strange lips and with another tongue will he speak to this people. That is, by the Assyrians. You refuse to hear me and call me a stammerer, you shall hear another kind of stammering which you will have to understand.

12, 13. I said unto you "there is rest," and ye would not hear, "Therefore shall the word of the Lord be unto you," etc., R. V. "You have scorned my instruction as monosyllables fit for children! By irritating monosyllables of gradual penalty shall God instruct you the second time."

The application of the whole lesson to the evils of drink is so direct and obvious as to need no comment.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Preach the depravity of men, but never apart from the possibilities that remain in them." Compare Isaiah 1: 18.

2. If men are deaf to the voice of conscience, and neglect the plain, common-sense teachings that come from everyday surroundings, God will speak in other and unshirkable ways.

TOPIC FOR ELEVENTH MONTH TWENTY-SEVENTH.

HOW INTEMPERANCE HINDERS MISSIONS.

Rom. 14: 13-21.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 21.—As it did in Rome. Rom. 13: 11-14.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 22.—A stumbling-block. Rom. 14: 19-23.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 23.—In Corinth. 1 Cor. 5: 7-13.

Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 24.—In Galatia. Gal. 5: 16-23.

Sixth-day, Eleventh mo. 25.—Peter's picture. 1 Pet. 4: 1-5.

Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 26.—In Thessalonica. 1 Thess. 5: 5-8.

One cannot read the epistles of Paul without being impressed with the frequency and urgency of his warnings and exhortations against the indulgence by some of those early Christians in sins of the grossest character; and it is one of the encouraging signs of progress, notably as recently as the last one hundred years, that the intemperate or even the moderate use of intoxicants is in almost all churches felt to be a grave departure from the Gospel standard. But the church cannot rest with achievements within its own borders. The enemy is only driven from one fortress to another,—outside the camp, to be sure, but yet where Christ's work of saving the world is strongly and too often successfully opposed.

Greed and appetite keep men in our own land so engrossed and enslaved that many of them seem unable to hear the voice of truth; and so closely is the traffic in liquors connected with the advance of the Caucasian that intemperance is almost regarded as the white man's characteristic. As Archdeacon Farrar said of Madagascar a few years since, "Drunkenness is considered a European fashion."

The same ships that bring missionaries, carry also cargoes of the vilest and most violent intoxicants; and while the missionary arranges for his home and acquires the language, the poison that knows no bounds of speech or race, that needs no interpreter and has as its advocate the most unprincipled commercial adventurers, is already about its work of destruction.

Kama, a Bechuana chieftain, once said to a British official, "I fear Lo Benguela less than I fear your brandy. I fought with Lo Benguela when he had his father's great warriors from Natal, and drove him back and he never came again. But to fight against drink is to fight against demons, and not against men. The assegais of the Matebele kill men's bodies and it is quickly over, but drink puts devils into men and destroys both their souls and bodies forever. Its wounds never heal."

Already agreements have been reached protecting from such destruction some of these helpless nations, but the work needs to be urged on and the evil, already sentenced by the fact that Christ came to destroy the works of the devil, brought to a speedy execution both at home and abroad.

IN THE AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

"The mission buildings are placed in the open, near the highest part; there is a rather bare hill higher, where we get a yet greater view. I alluded to mission 'buildings'—well, they are buildings in the sense that they were made by man for habitation and storage. They are all of thatch, except the main dwelling, which is of corrugated iron, freighted out from England in sections. It was given by British Friends, so they call it 'Devonshire House.' There is a sign-board over the front veranda lettered 'Devonshire House.' All is of iron, save the floor, which is of pounded dirt, smeared with cow dung to exterminate the vermin, then covered with native rush matting. These mats are not woven, only coarse reeds bound together. There are three rooms in the house, two large ones occupied by the Holes and Blackburns, respectively, and a small one occupied by Arthur Chilson. There is besides a small lean-to of thatch for a common dining-room. The others are either bee-hive huts without distinction of roof and walls, like a hollow haycock, in fact, or else rectangular structures of more size and stability with pitch roof. Such is the storehouse, where rations are distributed to the Kavirondo hands every evening. The tool house consists only of a roof. The dispensary is rather substantial, considering its material. The mission office is a tent with a thatch roof over it and extending beyond the rear of the tent enough to form shelter for the daily school, lasting about two hours after drumbeat at 2 p. m. The benches are logs. Adelaide Hole is teacher. There is an improvised blackboard, and the station women and children, the only attenders, have ample slates. They are learning to read and write, and arithmetic too, in Kiswahili. They are eager and quick at their lessons, usually. Our meeting house is but a low, unshapely thatched shelter, under which Friends sit while the blacks squat on the ground or on logs in front of us, often just at our feet. The Doctor's pride is the new brick kiln which he has just completed. Now he is superintending the erection of a roof under which to season the bricks after firing. I am occupying a new grass house, the largest on the premises, two rooms in each half. The iron house is so crowded that Friends built this to relieve the crowding there. It isn't finished yet—only a shell. Although the Holes are working daily at the half they intend soon to occupy.

"They have had the ground wetted and pounded to make a reasonably solid and even floor. Then they have covered this with the rush matting. All the joists (rough poles, really) have been wrapped in burlap, etc., to prevent the wood borer dust from dropping down over the room, coating all with a fine whitish powder worse than earth dust. Then they have stretched unbleached cotton cloth under the rafters for a ceiling and to exclude the same borer dust. Finally, there are to be put home-made jambs and doors in the doorways, and window frames and sashes in the window openings. This will be a fussy job for Edgar Hole without suitable material or particular tools. But they hope to move in shortly.

"I live for the present in the other half. The partition between the Holes' part and mine is of mud. I sleep in the inner room and write in the outer one. The floor is of loose dirt, covered with matting where I sleep. There is a window opening by my bed (a folding cot). When too airy I fix a mat over it. The inner room is screened from the outer by mats, and I let down another mat over the entrance at night. The outer room is almost wholly exposed. There are two door and two window apertures, utterly open, and no matting over the dirt. In one corner, by a window opening, is a large, home-made table, at which I write and study. As thou reads these very words imagine me crowded by an assemblage of fragrant, gaping, jabbering negroes (it does entertain them so to watch me write), lizards and rats scuttling over walls and floor (insects, of course, don't count), and that pervasive, indefatigable borer dust incessantly settling down over all.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Edgar Stranahan, of Wilmington, Ohio, is planning to spend the next academic year at Haverford.

Charles Wagner, the French pastor, is to lecture at Haverford College, on the evening of the 21st inst.

James Wood, of New York, and Alexander Wood, of New Jersey, were chosen presidential electors last week.

J. W. Elder, of Granite, Okla., is kept busy in evangelistic work. He feels the need of a companion evangelist, gifted in song.

Edgar Williams, who is located in the meeting at Greensboro, N. C., has been conducting a series of evening meetings at that place with very hopeful results.

William B. Petters, an International Y. M. C. A. secretary, recently gave a very helpful talk at Guilford College in behalf of the Student Volunteer missionary movement.

John M. Watson, who has been laboring for many weeks at Sandwich, Mass., is attending Baltimore Yearly Meeting, and will be in the limits of Baltimore about three weeks.

Joseph Bevan Braithwaite, Jr., of London, is making a short visit to this country, and was to be in Baltimore from Sixth-day of last week to Second-day of the present week.

By invitation of the Peace Committee of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, Joshua L. Bailly addressed the annual meeting in Friends' Meeting House, Baltimore, on Second-day evening, the 14th inst. Subject, "Echoes of the Boston Peace Congress."

Esther Cook, on her way from Vanwert Quarterly Meeting, Ohio, to other fields of labor, visited Friends' Home Meeting, six miles west of Celina, Ohio, where Thomas W. Inman was engaged in a series of meetings. She spent two days with Friends there and preached each evening.

Ada E. Lee has been engaged in evangelistic work in the limits of Contentnea Quarterly Meeting in Wayne and Sampson Counties, N. C. The greater part of the time, since Ninth month 25th, God has wonderfully blest the work, a large number have been converted and renewed and Christians have been brought on to higher ground.

The New York Herald for Eleventh month 9th, 1904, says that Eunice Kelly Gidley, of Dartmouth, Mass., is the oldest member of the Society of Friends in New England and probably in the world (?). She was 100 years old the 20th of Eighth month. She was at Friends' School, in Providence, R. I., in the year 1823 and remembers Moses Brown.

Smithfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Woonsocket, R. I., the 10th inst. Alfred T. Ware, of Brunswick, Me., was present and preached an interesting sermon at the morning meeting. Seth K. Gifford, principal of Moses Brown School, Providence, addressed the Bible School Conference, on the evening of the 9th inst., on "The Life and Teachings of Paul."

Martilla Cox has undertaken the pastoral work in the Darlington Meeting for this year. Her address is Darlington, Ind. The Friends there have recently built a modern, commodious and comfortable house within the city limits. Their former place was just outside the town. The prospect is fair for an increase in numbers and a deepening in spiritual life.

A missionary party composed of Levi R. Lupton, William M. Smith, Charles and Kitty Ellis Kurtzhalz, Jefferson W. and Helen M. Ford and little Clara G. Ford, sailed from Montreal, the 12th inst., for Liverpool, Eng. Their destination is some point in the southern Soudan country in Africa. They expect to reach their field the latter part of Twelfth month or the first of the new year.

Philadelphia Monthly Meeting for the Western District (Twelfth Street) has concluded to establish (or more correctly to re-establish) a Monthly Meeting at Haverford. The Quarterly Meeting concurred in this action last week. For many years there was a monthly meeting held at Haverford, known as "Radnor Monthly Meeting." The new meeting will be named "Haverford Monthly Meeting."

Leanah Hobson has closed her labors as pastor in the meeting at Dunreith, Ind., and is now engaged in evangelistic work at La Porte, Ind. She expects to continue in this work for some months. Recently she held a series of meetings at Hazlewood, a country place about twenty miles west of Indianapolis. More than a score were converted, and several renewed. Eight have applied for membership with Friends.

Mary J. Weaver, of Batavia, N. Y., recently held a series of meetings at Perry City, N. Y. Considerable interest was manifested. The attendance of young people and children in the meeting is very encouraging, and gives much promise for the future. Nellie T. Roberts, the local minister, is doing faithful, conscientious work, not only in the meeting, but in the homes of the people. There is a good prospect of an increase in membership.

John S. Turner, a missionary from Mexico, who has been visiting in the States the past two months, spoke to Friends at Greensboro, N. C., in a recent First-day morning service, and at Guilford College in the evening. He reviewed the work of the Missionary Publishing House in Mexico City, Mexico, and dwelt upon the prospective fruits of Protestant Christian efforts in that country. He spoke in affectionate and grateful terms of the work of Samuel A. Purdie, Julia Ballinger and Nancy Lee, of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, in Mexico. He will return shortly via Havana, Cuba.

Vanwert Quarterly Meeting was held from the 4th to 7th inst., near Tama, Mercer County, Ohio. The committee appointed by Indiana Yearly Meeting to visit, for their encouragement of the Quarterly Meetings, shown to be deficient by their reports on spiritual condition, were all present except one and held a conference in connection with the Quarterly Meeting, which was helpful and greatly enjoyed by all. Some of the speakers were Allen Jay Elbert Russell, Esther Cook and Eber S. Hobson. Many other ministering Friends were present and took part in the service, among whom was Ira C. Johnson, Yearly Meeting superintendent. All the sessions were well attended and the presence of all visiting Friends was highly appreciated.

Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting was held in Fall River, Mass., the 2d and 3d inst. The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, on the Fourth-day, received reports from its subordinate meetings concerning the spiritual condition of their members. The outlook was encouraging, particularly so in two of the meetings. Two carefully prepared papers were read on the manner of conducting meetings for worship, one by Alice E. Stevens and the other by Henry C. Aydelott. These papers elicited interesting and profitable remarks from others in attendance. The meeting for worship on Fifth-day opened with a period of silence, followed by several fervent prayers, and singing with much feeling the hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name," by the congregation. Alfred T. Ware, the Yearly Meeting's Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, gave a clear, forceful and inspiring address from the text, "But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." In the business meeting which followed, the subject of special interest was the report of our Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Evangelistic Work, and the taking of a collection for its aid.

The following account of the recent meeting of the ministers of Western Yearly Meeting was sent in by Martilia Cox, secretary: At the recent Western Yearly Meeting there was a general feeling among the ministers that we might enjoy a closer fellowship and have the opportunity of exchanging ideas in order that we might be deepened in Christian life and made more efficient in our service for the Master and the church as pastors and evangelists. Pursuant to this idea a meeting was called for the first Third-day in Eleventh month, at First Friends' Church, Indianapolis. Quite a number gathered at that time from various points in the Yearly Meeting. Steps were taken to effect a permanent organization, and a regular time of meeting was considered. By an article of the Constitution it was decided to meet "the first Third-day in each odd month unless otherwise arranged." Another article states, "It shall be the object of this association to mutually benefit its membership: 1st, By encouraging a closer fellowship among our ministers, and 2d, By a free and open discussion of practical pastoral problems and difficulties and Bible doctrines. An able and valuable address was given by Morton C. Pearson, of First Church, Indianapolis. His subject was "Four of Our Great Needs." He designed them as (1st) A clearer vision of Christ; such a vision as will quicken and spiritualize our understanding and make our messages prophetic. A sermon should be a burning message, instead of one studied up in order to have something to say; a revelation from God rather than one evolved from the mind of the speaker. 2d, Times and conditions change, hence our manner of reaching the souls of men must change. God never changes. We must study people. Be students of church history; of the present age; of political and moral reform; of the signs of the times. 3d, We should follow a regular course of reading. Our education should be supplemented by this, and should make us think correctly that our messages may be positive. There is great need of uniformity of teaching on the essential doctrines of salvation, especially on "Holiness." 4th, The necessity of proper financial support in order to hold our young people in the ministry. We must prepare the way for the ministry of to-morrow by speaking uniformly on this subject. If the young people of college education are not entering the ministry as they should, we should find the reason and arrest this tendency. Another subject of importance was that of evangelistic work. A "round table," conducted by Dr. Sylvester Newlin, of Westfield. Many helpful suggestions were given. Winning souls is the business of the church. An evangelistic spirit should be maintained throughout the year by the church, rather than deferred to a ten days or two weeks meeting only. The members of the pastoral committee equally with the pastor should have the burden for souls upon them, and all should work together with Him for winning souls and the sanctifying of believers.

THOMAS.—To Florence and A. S. Thomas, Amboy, Ind., Eleventh month 2d, 1904, a daughter.

DIED.

BALES.—At Stockton, Kan., Tenth month 6th, 1904, Delilah P. Cook, wife of Nathan Bales, in her 67th year. The deceased was reared a Friend, and lived a consistent Christian.

COMPTON.—Near New Burlington, Ohio, Tenth month 19th, 1904, Amos S., son of John and Rebecca Compton, aged 67 years. He was a birthright member of the Friends and was always a faithful attendant of the services for both worship and business, was appointed to many positions of trust and responsibility and for thirteen years occupied the station of elder.

HADLEY.—At his home, Horton, Brown County, Kan., Tenth month, 26th, 1904, William, son of David and Hannah Hadley (both deceased), aged over 59 years. The deceased was a birthright Friend, born at Sylvania, Parke County, Ind.

NICHOLS.—At Buffalo, Kan., Tenth month 28th 1904, Phebe A., wife of O. C. Nichols, in her 65th year. The deceased was a member of Buffalo Monthly Meeting for more than twenty years, and one of the stable Christian characters of the community.

PEEBLES.—At her home, Wabash, Ind., Ninth month 22d, 1904, Matilda Peebles, daughter of Richard and Hannah Jones, and wife of Stephen Peebles, in her 68th year. The deceased was a birthright and a faithful member of Friends during her life; she was a shut-in for years, but exceedingly patient.

Events and Comments.

A second Japanese loan of $60,000,000, bearing 6 per cent. interest, has just been announced. Half of the loan is to be taken by American and half by English capitalists.

A report from St. Petersburg says: "An extraordinary accumulation of grain has been caused by the war, and the deadlock for lack of cars and engines is appalling. More than 1,000,000 tons are held in carts and vans at depots and sidings, and this quantity would load 525 steamships and sailing vessels."

THE SIMPLE DISH THAT KEEPS ONE VIGOROUS AND WELL FED.

When the doctor takes his own medicine and the grocer eats the food he recommends some confidence comes to the observer.

A grocer, of Ossian, Ind., had a practical experience with food worth anyone's attention.

He says: "Six years ago I became so weak from stomach and bowel trouble that I was finally compelled to give up all work in my store, and in fact all sorts of work, for about four years. The last year I was confined to the bed nearly all of the time, and much of the time unable to retain food of any sort on my stomach. My bowels were badly constipated continually and I lost in weight from 165 pounds down to 88 pounds.

"When at the bottom of the ladder I changed treatment entirely and started in on Grape-Nuts and cream for nourishment. I used absolutely nothing but this for about three months. I slowly improved until I got out of bed and began to move about

"I have been improving regularly and now in the past two years have been working about fifteen hours a day in the store and never felt better in my life.

"During these two years I have never missed a breakfast of Grape-Nuts and cream, and often have it two meals a day, but the entire breakfast is always made of Grape-Nuts and cream alone.

"Since commencing the use of Grape-Nuts I have never used anything to stimulate the action of the bowels, a thing I had to do for years, but this food keeps me regular and in fine shape, and I am growing stronger and heavier every day.

"My customers, naturally, have been interested and I am compelled to answer a great many questions about Grape-Nuts.

"Some people would think that a simple dish of Grape-Nuts and cream would not carry one through to the noonday meal, but it will and in the most vigorous fashion."

Lake Shore Railroad officials have placed an order for 7,000 steel ties to be used as an experiment, probably near the eastern terminus of the road at Buffalo. Part of the order will be given to the New York Central for use on that road, and if the results are satisfactory it is expected that a more general use of the steel ties will be made along the entire system of the Vanderbilt roads.

Independent voters, after all, are every year more numerous in this country. In Massachusetts and Rhode Island there were some 50,000 men who, after voting for a Republican candidate for President, were capable of voting for a Democratic candidate for Governor. In Minnesota there were at least 50,000 more. It is discrimination of this sort that will make the republic live forever, if anything will.

The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin in the newspaper boycott case arising from the alleged business combination of the Sentinel, the News and the Evening Wisconsin, all published at Milwaukee, against the Journal of that city, affecting advertising rates. The opinion was delivered by Justice Holmes, and upheld the validity of the Wisconsin anti-trust law so far as it applied to this case.

Commissioner Garfield, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, has nearly completed his report on the operations of the Beef Trust. The report will be placed in the hands of the President within a very short time. It will then be submitted to Congress, and if anything appears which will give the government cause for action against any conspirators working in opposition to the Sherman act, the Department of Justice will be called to attend to the matter in exemplary fashion.

The reform organizations which are striving for the betterment of the municipal government of Philadelphia seem to be undismayed by the large Republican majority of last week. They are now arranging to concentrate their efforts in an attempt to elect better Councilmen at the spring election. A movement that is expected to take on the importance of the old Committee of One Hundred is a conference of the Municipal League members and prominent citizens to consider the most effective steps to promote good government of the city.

The election of Joseph W. Folk as Governor of Missouri by a plurality verging on 40,000, in the face of the hurricane of votes which swept Missouri from her long established Democratic position with a plurality for Roosevelt exceeding 15,000, is one of the startling yet inspiring features of the recent election. The success of Folk is infinitely more important than a partisan triumph. As District Attorney he displayed an undaunted courage in the prosecution of bribers and bootleggers and it was this which appeals to the admiration of honest men.

Any ill-feeling that may have existed between Panama and the United States on account of differences over canal zone affairs seems to be disappearing. Panamans are preparing to celebrate the arrival there of Secretary of War Taft and his friends. President Amador has appointed two commissions, one for the reception of Secretary Taft, and the other to make, in conjunction with Secretary Guardia, a thorough study of the canal treaty and to draft a memorandum preparing in the most practicable manner for a definite and conciliatory settlement of the rights of the contracting parties.

Negotiations have been initiated for a treaty of arbitration between Germany and the United States. Several days ago President Roosevelt suggested to Baron von Speck-Sternburg, the German Ambassador, that a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Germany would, in his judgment, be very desirable. The Ambassador, after conferring with his government, has informed President Roosevelt that Germany had expressed itself as entirely agreeable to the proposition, and that he had been directed to open formal negotiations for such a treaty. These negotiations will be conducted by Baron von Speck-Sternburg on the part of Germany and Secretary Hay on the part of the United States.

Reports are current to the effect that Russia has refused to entertain overtures made by Japan to end the war in the Far East. Unofficially it is stated that the Japanese Government made a direct proposition, in tentative terms. Though a failure, the effort has given rise to a widespread belief that a way has thus been opened for intervention. The United States, Great Britain and France are expected to take the step. While Russia has refused to accept a direct proposal from Japan, it is thought that representations made by these Powers might succeed. Russia then could, with good grace, yield to a wish expressed by this trio of the world's greatest nations, each with much at stake in the Orient, and be free from the necessity of admitting to a victorious opponent that she had wearied of the war.

The winter session of the Cuban Congress opened last week. In sharp contrast to the rows and disinclination to legislate which characterized the summer session every one was composed and hopeful. Nationalist leaders declare that it is not their intention to pursue their former obstructive tactics. There were less than half a dozen absentees in each house, and the proceedings were characterized by friendliness. President Palma submitted the budget of expenses for next year, amounting to $19,000,000, of which he proposed to devote $2,500,000 for the construction of new roads and bridges. The message stated that if the customs revenues continue as heavy as at present the Executive will ask $20,000,000 for 1906. He congratulated the Congress upon the country's tranquility, and compliments the military establishment and the various government departments. The number of schools has reached 3,600, with 120,000 pupils, an increase for the year of 10,000.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presby't'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine."

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminently a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

By special arrangement we are permitted to offer this book with One Year's Subscription to The American Friend for the Price of the Book Alone, $2.50. (ADD 35 CENTS FOR EXPRESSAGE.)

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD'S WINTER EXCURSION ROUTE BOOK.

In pursuance of its annual custom, the Passenger Department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has just issued an attractive and comprehensive book descriptive of the leading winter resorts of the East and South, and giving the rates and various routes and combinations of routes of travel. Like all the publications of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, this "Winter Excursion Book" is a model of typographical and pictorial work. It is bound in a handsome and artistic cover in colors, and contains much valuable information for Winter tourists and travelers in general. It can be had free of charge at the principal ticket offices of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, or will be sent postpaid upon application to George W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Sipp.—"Young man, how dare you swear before my wife?"

Boy.—"How did I know your wife wanted to swear first?"

WINTER RESORTS OF THE SOUTH. REACHED BY THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

The Southern Railway announces the sale of round-trip Winter Excursion tickets, with stop-over privileges, to all the principal resorts of the South, beginning October 15th, 1904.

The winter resorts of North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida are especially inviting to those in search of health or pleasure. In these States are such noted resorts as Pinehurst and Asheville, N. C. Camden, Aiken, Summerville and Charleston, S. C. Augusta, Savannah, Brunswick, Jekyll Island and Thomasville, Ga. Jacksonville, St. Augustine, Ormond, Daytona, Palm Beach, Rockledge, Miami and Tampa, Fla.; also the resorts of Porto Rico and Cuba are best reached via Southern Railway.

Tickets on sale up to and including April 30th, 1905, limited to return until May 31st, 1905.

Winter tourist tickets are also on sale to the noted resorts of the Gulf Coast, Mobile, New Orleans, Texas, Mexico, New Mexico, Arizona and California.

The Southern Railway now has greatly improved facilities, having completed a considerable portion of its double track road, and the completion of the new double track bridge over the Potomac River at Washington also expedites the movements of its trains.

Elegant vestibuled trains with the latest Pullman drawing-room sleeping cars are operated through between Eastern cities and the Southern resorts. The very best dining car service, and everything for the comfort and pleasure of its patrons.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

SOCIAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD

Studies in Human and Divine Inter-Relationship

BY

RUFUS M. JONES, A. M., Litt. D.

PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN HAVERFORD COLLEGE

This is a fresh interpretation of the deepest problems of life. The author tells in straightforward and untechnical language what it means to be a person. He points out that to be a person one must be bound up in organic relation with many persons, and step by step he reaches the discovery that this social relationship stretches from earth to heaven—that God and man are also bound together in organic relationship. He shows how the search for God reveals this. How the great mystics have realized it, how the movement of Quakerism illustrates it, how both Faith and Reason unite to proclaim it, and finally how the New Testament confirms this central idea of the Divine-Human life. The book is full of optimism and good cheer.

THE SHADOW ON THE BLIND.

*Last night I walked among the lamps that gleamed,
And saw a shadow on a window blind,
A moving shadow, and the picture seemed
To call some scene to mind.*

*I looked again; a dark form to and fro
Swayed softly as to music full of rest,
Bent low, bent lower—still I did not know,
And then, at last, I guessed.*

*And through the night came all old memories flock-

*White memories like the snowflakes round me

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $1.50 A YEAR ❁ ❁ ❁ PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE AMERICAN FRIEND PUBLISHING COMPANY, 1010 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Entered at Philadelphia Post Office as Second-Class Matter.

A cheap edition of Pres. Sharpless's "A Quaker Experiment in Government" with all the matter and all the illustrations of the Haverford Edition.

THE History of Pennsylvania from its founding by William Penn in 1682 to the Revolution shows Quakerism as tested in the practical direction of affairs. This period has been much misrepresented by critics of the Society. They have treated it as a proof of the impracticability of Quaker principles. The only authoritative statement of the other side in this controversy is this book by President Sharpless. In its present shape it contains not only the early volume issued under the title, "A Quaker Experiment in Government," taking the history up to the year 1756, but also the later volume, "The Quakers in the Revolution," the still later chapter written for the Haverford Edition, on Friends in Public Life since the Revolution, and the Preface to the Haverford Edition replying to the critics of the earlier editions and of Quaker principles in general. Added to all this it has all the illustrations collected at great expense for the Haverford Edition, covering the persons and places connected with the early history of Pennsylvania.

There is nothing of the apologetic tone in President Sharpless's view of this period. He treats Quaker principles in practice not as something to defend but as a glorious record, the epic of Quakerism. Failure there was in a sense—the failure to reach an ideal. Judged by this standard all governments have failed. But there was a glorious success and an enduring light to mankind in the Quaker influence on Pennsylvania. Let all Friends of this generation glory in and honor it.

GOD AND MAN AT ONE.

THERE ARE in all countries some men to be found who care more about the price of railroad bonds and copper stocks than they do for a white, clean heart; and there are women who are more concerned over what some leader of society thinks of them than they are over what God thinks of them. But, nevertheless, there is deep down in most of us an unstilled desire for a right relation with God. Man as man wants God and longs for peace in his heart toward God. No other question has ever so deeply busied man's thought as this question: How are man and God made at one? What is atonement?

The true answer to this momentous question must spring out of the actual facts of Divine and human life and not rest on the dry bones of an intellectual theory. These facts, which have been slowly coming out in a series of articles, may now be briefly summed up.

1. The first clear human fact is my own sin and its stain upon my life. With this stain of sin comes a deeper trouble—the dominion of sin within my life, the enslaving nature of sin, so that I can no more deliver myself than I can physically lift myself. It spoils my life like a disease.

2. The second fact, which is as clear as consciousness, is the estranging nature of sin. It casts its dark shadow upon God's face. It opens a chasm between the sinner and the Person sinned against. The long story of sacrifice tells how deeply this sense of separation, of estrangement, of darkening has been rooted in the very nature of sin. It tells, too, of man's hopeless attempts to span the chasm from this edge of it. These are no fictions, no constructions of theology. They are palpitating facts of human experience.

3. The third fact has both a human and a Divine side to it, namely, life is through and through vicarious. Wherever there is love there is suffering. My sin will make all who love me suffer—suffer though they are pure and innocent and if, on the other hand, I am pure, and try to make bad men good, or sinful persons holy, I must suffer. I can raise no man a single cubit toward goodness until I share myself with him and enter into his struggle. Goodness comes only through tremendous cost. Only he can raise the spiritual level of life who will put his heart's blood into the veins of his fellows. This great human fact that our lives are bound up together, that life is organic, is also a Divine fact. God must suffer where there is sin and He must suffer to redeem from sin, because being God, being a Father, He must feel our sins and He must undertake to make us like Himself. THAT COSTS.

The Atonement is the great warm, living truth which springs out of these primary facts of life. Sin is infinitely more than a debt. To treat it only as a debt is to reduce life to a system of arithmetic. The dreadful thing about sin is not punishment either. Neither the balancing of accounts nor the removal of punishment could help us. The supreme trouble about sin is that it makes me what I am. There is no help unless I can be changed. To tell me that the account is squared, the punishment cancelled, is to still leave me my old nature in which all my trouble lies. I must be changed—I must learn to hate what I now love, and to love what I now hate. Until that comes, there is a wide gap between God and myself which no juggle of logic can hide. Man's real question then is what will change the old nature and set it Godward with passion and glowing joy? What will compel us to crucify the old man and to live henceforth unto God in unbroken union? This is the heart of the problem.

The Gospel is the answer to this world-old question, the solution of this immemorial problem. God in Christ has revealed: (1) What man might be if he were only sinless; (2) How sin makes God suffer; (3) What it costs to enter into our lives of sin and failure, to share them with us; (4) What it costs to lift imperfect men up into purity and perfection; (5) How the love of God reaches through the shadow of sin, across the chasm of sin and grasps man even in his sin to draw him home. In a word, He gave Himself on our behalf. He shed His blood that we might be saved. In the cross there is love. There is vicarious suffering. There is sacrifice. And there is, too, in a deep and wonderful way, a substitution, God takes our place. He shares with us the awful load. He does it not to square some account. He does it to reach us and change our nature, so that henceforth we shall live unto Him who loved us and gave Himself for us, that, as He died for us, we should die unto sin and rise with Him into new life—more than conquerors through Him that loved us. By cross and blood; by love and sacrifice; by forgiveness and grace, the appeal comes to thy heart—"Thou needs must love Me."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

DURING THE same week that the International Peace Conference was being held in Boston there was sitting in the same city a National Council of the Episcopal Church. The Bishops issued at that time a Pastoral Letter to the churches in America. This letter closes with these interesting words:

It would be impossible to conclude this letter without recognizing a coincidence in our assembling in the city of Boston, when there was sitting elsewhere in the same city, the International Peace Congress. There are those among us, who can remember when peace societies were left mainly to the advocacy of our brethren of the Society of Friends; and when many of us regarded their annual assemblages with good-natured contempt. Nothing is more inspiring in the whole history of our common Christianity than the tremendous revulsion of feeling which, in this regard, has come to pass.

The creation of The Hague Tribunal and the recognition, if not the formal, of international courts of arbitration, by some of the foremost empires of Europe, have indicated the recognition of an altered sentiment in regard to the arbitrament of war, of the most profound significance. Late and slowly the civilized world surrenders those notes of barbarism which it has inherited from Pagan times. Late and slowly it seems to dawn upon the minds of statesmen and scholars alike, that the argument of brute force is but a brute's argument after all. But all the while, from its first dawn in the cradle of Bethlehem, when to the shepherds on Judean hillsides the angels sang, "Glory to God, and peace, good-will to men!" down and on, through all the blood-stained ages that have followed, there has run the thread of a Divine purpose, beating down the barriers that divide man from man, and race from race, and hastening the time when the Fatherhood of God shall mean no less the brotherhood of all His children.

WE ARE giving herewith a few interesting passages from a letter which has just come from an important mission field in Southern China. The writer of the letter is Fannie Sinclair Woods. She is a graduate of Bryn Mawr College. Her sister, also a Bryn Mawr graduate, fell a martyr during the awful Boxer riots. "All over this southern part of China," she writes, "boys and girls are crying for an education. Various schools, most of them very poor, are trying to meet the demands of the boys; but so far the girls have almost nothing to satisfy their craving for more knowledge.

"Anyone who has felt the stimulation to better living and to greater longings for truth that comes to one while studying at Bryn Mawr, cannot help longing to give these girls at least some of the first steps toward such a broadened life. It was this that urged me and two of my friends to start a class for these girls, which I hope to see develop into a thoroughly organized school."

This is particularly valuable, for it shows the genuine spirit of the true Christian life which longs to share what it has with those who have not, and it shows that advanced education does not take away the true evangelical spirit, it only trains it for wider service. She closes her letter with this testimony: "I cannot express how thankful I feel for all that Bryn Mawr has meant to me. In everything I do, big and little, I feel the influence of its teaching strong upon me."

THE MOST encouraging movement that has appeared in a quarter of a century for the reform of the government of the city of Philadelphia is now under way. The events of the recent election proved the last straw on the back of the long patient camel. Public sentiment is actually aroused, and the true citizens of the city are girding for something serious. The first step in the campaign for a new citizenship, for a city no longer owned by a machine, was a strong public meeting in the Bourse last week, and the organization of a new independent movement. It has received splendid backing from leading citizens, from the city journals, and from religious leaders, and, best of all, it has already frightened the politicians. It is a matter for some satisfaction that the chairman of this meeting in the Bourse was a Friend, and that he was chosen to plan the new organization.

WITH BALTIMORE yearly meeting the series of annual gatherings, of which there are in all in America fourteen, comes to an end for this year. There have been few issues of a new and striking sort before Friends during 1904. Not much, perhaps, for the historian to record. But on the other hand, there have been some clear signs of slow, steady progress all along the line. Each year indicates that we are getting the actual work of the Church better in hand, and there is some ground for the faith that the spirit and power of service are on the increase. There is, let us hope, more to follow.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SWEETENING THE BITTER THINGS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

What a fine series of life lessons for the Christian is presented in the journeyings of the children of Israel from Egypt to the promised land! Almost every scene illustrates some practical truth or spiritual experience. For example, the Israelites, soon after leaving the Red Sea, and after a weary march over torrid sands, come upon a fountain in the desert. They rush forward eagerly for a refreshing draft. But alas! the first taste is a taste of disappointment; for the waters are so bitter that neither man nor beast can drink them. At once the murmuring multitude give to the unpalatable waters the name of "Marah," which signifies the water of bitterness. There is a still more terrible bitterness of disappointment in their hearts. They forget all about their deliverance from the land of bondage and the waves of the Red Sea, and think only of their present troubles. With a mixture of ingratitude and despair they crowd about their leader and cry out, "What shall we drink?"

Now, this exciting scene beside the fountain of Marah finds a parallel in many a chapter of our life experience; and we read of such in the lives of others. Abraham Lincoln was keenly disappointed because he did not win a certain office under President Taylor, and afterward that he was not elected to the United States Senate; but then he might have missed the most exalted station that any American has won in this century. Young Frederick W. Robertson was disappointed because he did not get a commission in the British army; but God had a better place for him in the army of Jesus Christ as the most brilliant preacher in the Church of England. In our humble experiences we have had some tastes of the waters of Marah. We had set our hearts on some favorite plan or project. Perhaps we were going on a long-coveted tour, and had made all our arrangements. But the day for our departure finds us on a bed of severe sickness, and the medicines we swallow are not as bitter as the disappointment. Selfishness murmurs and chafes under the trial; but presently we begin to discover that the sick bed lay right on the direct road toward Canaan. We begin to talk with our own hearts, and to think over our past lives. We make a fresh covenant with God that if He will restore us to health we will use it for Him and be more fruitful Christians. We take up one precious promise after another and drop it into the fountain of trial, and lo! the bitter waters begin to taste sweeter to us. Prayer becomes sweeter, and Christ's presence sweeter, and something whispers to us, "After all, is not this better for me than the journey to Europe or to California? Is it not good for me that I have been shut in here with my Saviour?"

Now this was just what happened to disappointed and murmuring Israel. The Lord showed to Moses a certain tree which, when he had cast it into the fountain, the waters were made sweet, and the whole multitude drank of them with delight. We do not read that God created the tree by a miracle; He simply "showed" it to Moses. So our Heavenly Father does not create a Bible, or an atonement, or a mercy-seat, or the promises or supplies of grace expressly for us. His Spirit opens our eyes to see them, and our hearts to enjoy them. He reveals to us the tree of healing which turns a draught of bitterness into a draught of holy joy. And so it is that "Trials make the promise sweet,

Trials give new life to prayer,
Bring us to the Saviour's feet,
Lay us low, and keep us there."

I do not pretend to be a superior scholar in the school of Providence, but many of the best lessons in life have been taught me by disappointment. One lesson we have all learned is that this world was not made and is not managed only for us. If it were, then the sun would shine just when we wanted a fair day, and the rain would fall when our garden needed to be watered. But we have found that God goes right on and orders things as pleaseth Him, without consulting us; and when our plans were thwarted, and a little Marah began to bubble up in our hearts, that stern schoolmaster, Disappointment, said to us, "Don't be selfish. This world was not made for you alone. Your loss is another's gain. The rain that spoiled your new-mown hay made your neighbor's corn grow; the fall in grain or in dry-goods that reduced your profits will help yonder poor widow to feed and clothe her children more easily." Wherefore we were reconciled to our losses, and the little Marah began to taste sweeter.

There is not a single person who reads these lines who has not had some bitter cups pressed to his lips. No journey to the heavenly Canaan is trodden without some Marahs on the road. The power and the glory of Christ's grace is in sweetening the draughts. I have often sat down beside a child of God who had in her hand a bitter cup of trial, but the sweet breath of Jesus has turned the bitterness into such a blessing that she tastes the love of Jesus in every drop. Grand old Richard Baxter, after a life of constant suffering, exclaimed, "O my God, I thank Thee for a bodily discipline of eight and fifty years!" That noble and consecrated layman, Harlan Page, of New York, during his last illness uttered these triumphant words: "A bed of pain is a precious place when we have the presence of Christ. God does not send one unnecessary affliction. Lord, I thank Thee for suffering. I deserve it; let me not complain or dictate. I commit myself to Thee, O Saviour, and to Thy infinite love. I stop my mouth and lie low beside Thee." So did victorious grace build up that blood-redeemed soul faster than disease was pulling down the frail tenement in which it dwelt; and through the rents which coming death was making, heaven's glory shone in with a rapturous radiance. These were splendid testimonies. I earnestly hope that in many chambers of sickness and houses of sorrow they may be like the boughs from that tree which Moses plucked and cast into Marah, making the waters of bitterness sweet to the thirsty drinkers. God knows best.

"All the lessons He shall send
Are the sweetest
And His training in the end
Is completest."

WAR PASSING OUT.

To the Editor of the New York "Sun"—Sir: The agreement of Great Britain and Russia to refer to the arbitration of The Hague Tribunal the questions of fact and all the points in dispute between them concerning the tragic incident in the North Sea is a hopeful evidence of the advancement of civilization in enlightened reasonableness.

It may be said, of course, and truly, that both of these great Powers are peculiarly averse to a warlike conflict at the present time. Russia has found that in Japan alone she has an enemy against whom she must marshal all her possible military resources if she is to be successful, or even to save herself from the humiliation of complete and disastrous defeat. France, her ally, had no wish and probably no intention of coming to her aid if war between Russia and England had resulted from the North Sea incident. Germany has manifested sympathy with the Czar in the existing conflict, but all her interests forbid her embroilment in such a contest. The same may be said of Europe and of civilization generally. Nowhere is the possibility of war looked forward to without the gravest apprehension. Even Russia would not have entered into the present war with Japan if she had not grossly miscalculated Japan's military strength and her determination to fight against Russian pretensions in the Far East. It is a conflict which in all respects is a calamity for civilization.

Great Britain, moreover, has had enough of war for this generation in South Africa, a war in which she won no glory and probably planted the seeds of future African troubles for her. The general business condition of England at the present time dictates the necessity of a long period of assured peace. All the financial and commercial exchanges of Europe and this country want peace, and are allied in making powerful efforts to prevent hereafter the settlement of questions in dispute between nations by a resort to arms, so dangerous to the interests of the whole civilized world, now knit together so closely and so intimately.

Another cause tending to the ultimate and perhaps speedy abolition of war among the great nations is the lesson which the Japanese-Russian conflict has taught and is still teaching. When an insular Oriental Power, only recently entered into the ranks of civilized States, demonstrates her superiority in the use of modern and scientific military methods, the Western soldier must necessarily feel a degree of humiliation. Those best informed as to our Occidental military and naval potency must incline to the unwelcome judgment that the fate which has met the Russian army and fleet at the hands of Japan might, and probably would, have been encountered by any Western army and navy in conflict with her, at least to some degree. Military and naval methods under dispute at the West, as to which a large part of professional opinion was in grave doubt, even if it was not absolutely prejudiced against them, were adopted and carried out to their fullest efficiency by Japan without question. That country, only now on the threshold of civilization, has no traditions on the subject to overcome. With us all military tradition is, or at least was, against them or sceptical of them.

The consequence is that the willingness to fight is disappearing from our Western civilization. The Japanese war has reduced all war to something like an absurdity in the heart of the Western soldier—has turned us all against it. The glory of war has departed. The battleship has become a machine under the practical command of the engineer. Fighting on land is a matter of cold science, as prosaic as the digging of our subways. A general's headquarters are now the centre of telephonic and telegraphic systems like the headquarters of a railroad, and he has become a man of affairs, like the superintendent of a great business enterprise employing many thousands of men engaged in many departments of related activities.

That is, the pomp and circumstance of war are gone, and they will never be restored. The great battles in which civilization now engages are peaceful struggles to conquer natural obstacles by mechanical and scientific means and push forward commerce and industry. Peace has become the watchword of civilization. The Hague Tribunal expresses modern enlightenment.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

One could almost describe Baltimore Yearly Meeting of 1904 in a phrase—the familiar direction to Joshua: "Moses my servant is dead; now, therefore, arise." If asked to name the four persons most useful in their particular spheres one year ago, four who have died since, then would probably have been selected by most. And it was very significant, and indicative of God's way of dealing that what took strongest hold of the meeting and met the fullest response was the call of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee to a forward movement. The chairman of the committee very plainly laid upon the meeting the responsibility for the work, asked for an increased appropriation and full liberty to use the funds as the committee thought best. Every request was granted, and the meeting seemed to feel the importance of every one doing his best. What the outcome will be only time can tell, but there was a quiet, undemonstrative air of determination which was impressive.

Possibly because of the quieting effect of the recent severe loss the meeting had met with in the death of Dr. Richard H. Thomas, there was an atmosphere of courtesy and consideration for others remarkable even for Baltimore Yearly Meeting, and the business was transacted smoothly and with expedition. Visitors from other Yearly Meetings often remark upon the number of members who participate in our deliberations, and this was even more notable this year than usual.

The session at which the memorial of Dr. Thomas was read was a very solemn occasion. His gift for personal helpfulness was so great that many desired to testify to the help he had given them aside from his public service; and opportunity was very properly taken to refer to others who had been taken away during the year, notably Francis White, Joseph Harrison and Augusta L. Watkins.

The chairman of the Foreign Mission Committee called attention to the fact that the time when $400 a year seemed a great deal for the Yearly Meeting to raise for missions did not seem so very long ago, and yet $1600 had been given the past year, an increase of $500 over the previous year, being nearly one dollar and a half per member. The only change made in appropriations was to transfer funds formerly given for the Scripture Union work in Japan to the hospital in Tokio, under the care of Dr. Willis N. Whitney, who is a member of Baltimore Yearly Meeting. Zenas L. Martin addressed the public meeting on Seventh-day evening, giving a very clear account of the work in Cuba, for which the Baltimore committee makes an appropriation.

The Home Mission and the Temperance committees reported active work, but nothing very notable. The Educational committee is a very useful one, and keeps a close watch on the children of the meeting to see that they are properly educated. Allen C. Thomas was chosen delegate, and Miles White, Jr., alternate, to the proposed conference at Earlham College next summer. The meeting was reminded that the first Educational Conference of Friends was held in Baltimore. In the discussion of the Bible School report, which showed an increase in enrolment, some amusement was created by the earnest protest of the country school against being burdened with machinery which might be helpful in the city.

The question which is being considered quite generally in the Yearly Meetings now, as to how to avoid making the epistles a burden and to retain their value was considered in a limited way. In Baltimore three to five epistles from other Yearly Meetings are read at a time, making three or four groups.

This avoids a long sitting devoted entirely to epistles and preserves the life and interest. If short epistles were sent and handled in this way, probably no change would be needed. And Baltimore set a good example this year by writing a very short epistle.

The Washington meeting house, only recently finished, has been taken by the government, together with the rest of the square in which it is located, for an office building for the Senate. Friends are not required to surrender possession at once, and the amount allowed for the property by the Commission will, it is hoped, be sufficient to locate Friends elsewhere, but the new location is not yet selected.

Very few ministers from other Yearly Meetings were present, only four with minutes: John M. Watson, of Kansas Yearly Meeting; Hiram S. Wollam, of Ohio; Anna B. Crawford, of Philadelphia; and Minnie Bassett, of Western. Joseph B. Braithwaite, Jr., of London, spent three days from a business trip with us very helpfully, and Zenas Martin was present on Foreign Mission affairs. The devotional meetings were held in the morning, as usual, and were well attended and productive of good. The heavy snow-storm on First-day, a very unusual event in Baltimore early in November, interfered with the First-day afternoon Christian Endeavor meeting, and with the evening meeting.

A very pleasant feature of the gathering was the housing of about forty-five Friends in a large house near by, fitted up for the occasion with cots and other furniture. Meals were also served in the house, dinners and teas for all. A reception room for social purposes and a writing room occupied the front of the house, and the arrangement added much to the comfort and profit of the gathering.

LESSON X.

TWELFTH MONTH 4, 1904.

HEZEKIAH REOPENS THE TEMPLE.

2 Chronicles 29: 18-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Them that honor me I will honor.—1 Sam. 2: 30.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 28.—Reforms inaugurated. 2 Chron. 29: 1-17.
Third-day, Eleventh mo. 29.—Hezekiah reopens temple. 2 Chron. 29: 18-30.
Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 30.—Many offerings. 2 Chron. 29: 31-36.
Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 1.—Hezekiah's character. 2 Kings 18: 1-8.
Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 2.—A great Passover. 2 Chron. 30: 1-10.
Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 3.—The Feast. 2 Chron. 30: 14-27.
First-day, Twelfth mo. 4.—Prosperity. 2 Chron. 31: 1-10.

Time.—Somewhere between 726 and 721 B. C.

Place.—Jerusalem and the kingdom of Judah.

Kings.—Hezekiah, king of Judah (727-695 B. C.); Hoshea, the last king of Israel (734-722 B. C.).

Prophets.—Isaiah and Micah.

Under Uziah, as we have seen (Lesson VIII), there was great prosperity in Judah for about forty years. Then came a change and there was a great declension, especially in morals. This took place during the latter part of the reign of Uziah, and during the reigns of his son, Joham, and his grandson, Ahaz, particularly the latter. Ahaz introduced the worship of Moloch, one of the worst of the heathen cults. (Compare 2 King 16: 3; 2 Chron. 28: 3, etc.), and shut up the doors of the temple (2 Chron. 28: 24; 29: 5, 16). The effect upon the people can easily be imagined.

That Hezekiah should have grown up to be a good man amid all those evil surroundings of his youth is remarkable. The fact seems to have been due probably to a good mother, Abijah, and to a good wife, Hephzibah (2 Kings 21: 1). Hezekiah is classed alone with David, and Josiah as being a perfect or nearly perfect king (2 Kings 18: 5). He stands out as one of the noblest kings in Biblical history. He came to the throne when he was twenty-five years old and reigned twenty-nine years. As soon as he came to the throne he at once set about a reformation, and began it by reopening the doors of the Temple, and setting the priests and Levites at work cleansing the building. The accumulations of years was carried to the brook Kidron. The whole work apparently took sixteen days, eight days for the Temple and eight days for the courts. See 2 Chron. 29: 1-17. At this time the lesson begins.

18. The workers now reported to the king the completion of their task. "Altar of burnt offering" (2 Chron. 4: 1). "Shewbread table." "Table of shewbread," R. V. Literally, "Bread of presence." The loaves were "the standing expression of the nation's gratitude to the Giver of all for the bounties of His providence." It was doubtless unleavened.

19. "Did cast away or cut up." See 2 Chron. 28: 24, also 2 Kings 16: 14, 17.

20. "Rulers." "Princes," R. V. These were the most influential men and doubtless in the days of Ahaz were his supporters. Now they were to make an atonement for their transgressions.

21. "Sin offering." According to the law a sin offering might be a bullock, a he-goat or a lamb. (Lev. 4: 3, 23, 32.) On this occasion the sacrifice was for the people and seven of four kinds of animals were taken. Seven is the perfect number.

22. The blood was considered to be the life, and to shed the blood was to give the life. To place the blood on the altar was a symbol of the sacrificers laying their own lives upon God's altar. The blood appears to have been received in a basin and thrown or dashed from the basin upon the altar.

23. "They laid their hands upon them." "They," the representatives of the people. In putting the hands upon the animal they recognized the animal as their representative, and by the touch their sin was transferred and the animal became the typical substitute.

24. "Made reconciliation." Better as in R. V. "Made a sin-offering." "All Israel." Not Judah only but the northern kingdom as well.

25. So far the ceremonies seem to have been performed in silence, but now there was to be rejoicing expressed by music. "Cymbals." These were similar to modern ones. "Psalteries." Psalterion was a general name for several kinds of stringed instruments which were played with both hands, so "harp" comes nearest to the Hebrew word. "David," 1 Chron. 23: 5; "Gad," 2 Sam. 24: 11; "Nathan." When and where we are not told. "For so was the commandments," etc. Better, "For the commandment was by the Lord, even by His prophets." Compare 1 Chron. 15: 24.

27. The song of the Lord began also, and the trumpets, together with the instruments of David." R. V., or more literally, "even according to the guidance of the instruments of David." That is, just as an organ is followed in church singing. Note the difference between the peace offerings of verse 31, and this burnt offering, which were wholly consumed.

28. It was a universal and whole-souled exercise.

29. "Bowed and worshipped." Absolute prostration followed the bended head.

30. "Sing praises." It is not at all unlikely that "praises" should be translated "Psalms."

31. "Answered and said." That is, to the thoughts or expectation of the people. They had consecrated themselves to the Lord; now said Hezekiah, show your real heart by giving something to the Lord. "As many as were of a willing heart." R. V.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Almost all revivals are started by some one earnest man.

2. Rom. 12: 1.

3. Not only congregations, but also individuals should seek individual forgiveness, and offer thanksgiving for special blessings.

TOPIC FOR TWELFTH MONTH FOURTH.

HOW TO WORSHIP IN SPIRIT AND IN TRUTH.

Ps. 100: 1-5; John 4: 19-24.

Second-day, Eleventh mo. 28.—Hearing the word. Deut. 31: 11.

Third-day, Eleventh mo. 29.—Singing praise. 2 Chron. 5: 13, 14.

Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 30.—Prayer. 2 Chron. 7: 1, 15, 16.

Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 1.—Offerings. Ps. 96: 1-8.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 2.—Confession. Joel 2: 15-17.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 3.—In the Spirit. Acts 2: 1-4.

Worship ranges all the way from a groveling fear to an approach with demands, and threats, if the demands made are not granted. But the worshiper of God, the Creator of all, can make no threats of loss, for all things belong to Him, and our withholding is the occasion of our own impoverishment rather than of His. Nor can we come in servile fear since the teaching by Christ of the greatness of God's love. Yet we cannot forget that we owe Him a reverence and a fear to disobey that will keep us clear from offending with the assumption of easy familiarity that marks the attitude of some.

Since worship is in spirit we have not done enough in joining ourselves to those who are making outward demonstration, nor even in repeating the words appropriate to worship, for we read of those who called upon God with their lips while their hearts were far from Him.

When Jesus said that because God is a spirit, they that worship must worship in spirit, he made it clear that an understanding of the nature of God is necessary to worship. To know Him is eternal life. We talk of cultivating the acquaintance of those whom we are led to admire, yet how often we leave our acquaintanceship with God to the words of others about Him and a formal attitude toward Him instead of seeking earnestly for ourselves the ready source of a better knowledge than any human intermediary can give.

Such seeking is in itself worship, for it involves the elements of appreciation and reverence and draws us to Him with a desire that lifts us into the realm of His own excellences; and thus springs up the highest form of worship,—the developing of a likeness, the patterning of our lives after God manifested in the flesh. It is worship to love as Jesus loves, to be beneficent and just, to be merciful and hopeful of good as He is. Couple with this our heartfelt praise and thankfulness that He has given us a knowledge of Himself and enabled us to be assured of His favor, and assuredly we shall be accepted in the Beloved.

The assembling of those of like desires and common purposes favors the strengthening of those desires and the accomplishment of those purposes in accordance with the social law which is divinely implanted in the nature of man by Him of whom it is said that He "loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." It is worship too to serve Him in the daily round of duty, to live truly and honestly and helpfully, and to maintain the mind and demeanor of Christ in the stress of trial in the midst of the multitude and in the hidden quiet of our own private lives, known only to Him and ourselves.

He who is true to the best he knows to-day will know a better best to-morrow.—Charles Gordon Ames.

Correspondence.

A CORRECTION.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

In the list of committees on page 166 of Indiana Yearly Meeting's printed Minutes, the officers of the Temperance Committee are correctly given; but the names of the former committee are given instead of those of the revised committee as appointed on page 105, and which are the following: Cyrus W. Hodgins, Hannah L. Smith, Frank C. Stanley, Sarah B. Woodard, Emma Hedges, Clarkson H. Parker, Margaret Hosier, Calvin Hutchins, Arthur Wildman and F. H. Tormohlen.

TIMOTHY NICHOLSON.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

I most heartily endorse the article by Gilbert Bowles, in a recent number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, in regard to Friends' Academies. I wish that every Friend who is lukewarm on the subject of education would not only read it, but re-read it, getting the thoughts well in mind, letting it so energize their hearts and pocketbooks that they would seek to make possible the realization of the good conditions named in the article.

I am very sure I voice the sentiment of hundreds of academic graduates and students when I say the good influence of Friends' Academies is beyond all human estimate. Then why ever let one of them die? My own beloved Alma Mater is dead. With proper effort her life could have been saved. This academy was a beacon light in the community. Her graduates are almost without exception filling positions of usefulness in the world. Some of them are across the sea spreading the savor of His Name among those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

A large per cent. of the ex-students of that institution are highly respected men and women. Many of them found Jesus as their Saviour during their student days; and some have gone to live in the mansions above.

Friends can ill-afford to be indifferent to that all important educational institution—the Friends' Academy. The disposition on the part of some to reach forward in assisting Friends' colleges to the neglect of the academies is a backward step. The academy is not a luxury, but a necessity for the highest and best cultivation of the young people. Therefore, for the sake of the heart culture so essentially prominent in Friends' schools, as well as for the intellectual and physical, I plead for the academies now struggling for existence.

"Master, forgive and inspire us anew;
Banish our worldliness, help us to ever
Live with eternity's values in view."

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Lemuel and Rachel W. Middleton have transferred their membership from Kokomo, Ind., to Friendswood Monthly Meeting, Texas.

Daisy Barr has just closed a successful ten days' revival at Onaway, Mich. There were about forty conversions and renewals, while many more were deeply moved.

The Friends at Earlham, Iowa, observed the 6th inst. as "Jamaica Day." After the sermon two hundred and twenty-five dollars were raised for the mission work in Jamaica.

William and Susan T. Thompson have left North Dartmouth, Mass., and are at New Bedford, Mass., for the winter. Their address will be 26 Seventh street, New Bedford, Mass.

Rufus M. Jones delivered a lecture on "Psychology," at Friends' Meeting House, on Twentieth street, New York, on the evening of the 19th. He also attended meeting in the same house the day following.

Lydia N. Blair, wife of Franklin S. Blair, of North Carolina, a member of the Guilford College faculty, passed from service to reward on Second-day, the 14th inst. We hope to publish a more extended account later.

Edward Mott has removed from Tecumseh, Mich., to Cleveland, Ohio. Edgar A. Wollam, who has assisted in the pastoral work at Tecumseh for several months, has accepted the invitation to serve the meeting as pastor the ensuing year.

On the evening of the 13th inst., at the First Friends' Meeting House, Indianapolis, Ind., Wilson S. Doan delivered a masterly address on "John Bright and His Message." The lecture was replete with excellent thoughts and thoroughly delighted the audience.

The thirty-eighth anniversary of the founding of the Universal Peace Union of Philadelphia, will be celebrated in the Young Friends' Association Building, Fifteenth and Cherry streets, the afternoon and evening of Twelfth month 6th. Judge Ashman will preside.

Professor Koenig, of France, who is companion to Charles Wagner, and one of the leading preachers and scholars in the Protestant Church of France, attended Twelfth Street Meeting, on Fourth-day, the 15th inst. The preceding day he gave two valuable lectures at Haverford College—one in English and one in French.

Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting was held the 13th and 14th inst., at Stuart, Iowa. Clark Brown preached an excellent sermon on Seventh-day morning. The evening was occupied by the Christian Endeavorers who gave a very interesting program. Sabbath morning Charles White, of Earlham, preached, and Goldie Thomson conducted the evening service.

The Young Friends and the Young Friends' Societies in England have changed the name of their monthly periodical, Fellowship, to a quarterly journal, with the title, The Young Friends' Review. The first issue just before us is most encouraging. It contains a lot of "live matter." The introductory article by John Wilhem Rowntree, on "God in Christ," is a powerful study of the atonement—a presentation of the vital view.

A meeting will be held by the Friends' Educational Association at 140 North Sixteenth street, Philadelphia, on Seventh-day, Twelfth month 3d, at 2.30 p. m., which all interested are invited to attend. Program—"The Training of Children in the Duties and Obligations of Citizenship," Joshua L. Baily and Francis R. Cope, Jr. Discussion by Isaac Sharpless, Ruth S. Goodwin, Hannah W. Cadbury, Thomas K. Brown and others. Theresa Wildman, secretary.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Tecumseh, Mich., the 5th and 6th inst. J. Walter Malone and Lida G. Romick were present and preached the Gospel with power, both Seventh- and First-days. Evangelistic services were held three evenings in which souls were blest. The missionary meeting, First-day afternoon, was addressed by Edgar J. Sanders and wife, who are expecting to go as missionaries to India. The next Quarterly Meeting will be held in Adrian City, Mich.

The statistical report of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions for 1903-1904 has just reached us. It shows a total of 87 missionaries, 30 men and 57 women. The contributions aggregate $80,485, of which $3,756 went to the Africa Industrial Mission, $6,095 to the Cuban work and $70,634 to the several fields of work under the supervision of the various Yearly Meeting Boards. Copies of this report can be secured from Mahalah Jay, secretary of the Board, Richmond, Ind.

The annual conference of the Spiceland and Walnut Ridge Quarterly Meetings was held at Carthage, Ind., on Third-day, the 15th inst. About two hundred persons were present. During the morning session, the theme discussed was, the development and exercise of Spiritual Gifts. An excellent dinner was served to all visitors. In the afternoon, the subjects discussed were, the Christian's family worship and daily conduct. Valuable information was given. Two missionaries from India were present, giving interesting items of their labors in that country.

The sad news has just reached us that Caroline Y. Baily, oldest daughter of Hezekiah and Elizabeth Baily, of Covington, Ky., has been called away from her earthly labor and service. Her death will seem to many of us almost a calamity. She was still in the strength and vigor of early womanhood. She was well equipped for valuable service. She had a high degree of genuine consecration and she had found her place in the Christian activities of Cincinnati. She will be missed by a large circle of friends; she will leave a great void in her own meeting and an unspeakable sense of loss in the vacant home.

Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting, Kan., was held Eleventh month 11th, 12th and 13th. Allison R. Wall, of Haviland Quarterly Meeting, was in attendance throughout the meeting. H. H. Townsend addressed the doctrinal conference Sixth-day, on the subject of "The Dispensation of the Holy Ghost." The meeting for worship, Seventh-day morning and evening, were addressed by George McGraw, of Elwood Monthly Meeting, Neb. On account of a storm on Fifth-day several representatives were unable to be present. The different sessions were well attended, especially Seventh- and First-days. An unusually interesting Bible school conference was held First-day afternoon.

Purchase Quarterly Meeting was held at Chappaqua, N. Y. On Sixth-day evening, the 11th inst., L. Hollingsworth Wood gave his stereopticon lecture upon "Japan." The interested audience showed its appreciation by contributing well for foreign mission work. On Seventh-day there was a meeting for worship and business. After lunch a conference was held. "Friends Views of Worship" was presented by Alfred Busselle; "The Ministry," by Robert L. Simkin; "Baptism," by Alice Griffith, and "The Lord's Supper," by Richard F. Carr. It was an occasion of much profit. The Friends at Chappaqua are putting the meeting house in first-class order. A new roof and paint inside and outside make things becoming.

Friends of the West Side Meeting, Chicago, have just entered on the occupancy of a very pleasant and commodious church property at 191-193 Oakley Boulevard. The building is one which has been outgrown by another denomination, and Friends have obtained a favorable lease. The rooms are being put in first-class condition, and the members are inspired with new courage and hope. Three new active members are joining the Endeavor Society and a number of applications for church membership will come before an early Monthly Meeting. Friends locating or visiting in the western part of the city are always most welcome. Any wishing to communicate by letter, can address William M. Du Bois, 686 West Madison street, Chicago.

Pleasant View Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Mill Creek, near Haworth, Kan., the 4th to 6th inst. At the business meeting on Fifth-day and throughout the different sessions of the meeting, a general spirit of sympathy and Christian fellowship was felt. A sum of over eleven dollars was raised in the face of the meeting to be applied on delinquent Yearly Meeting stock. A letter, concerning the mission work and workers in Alaska, was read and the sum of thirty-four dollars and twenty-five cents was raised by pledge and collection, to be used for that work. A number from the various Monthly Meetings in the quarter were in attendance, also Frances Lifer, a minister, formerly of Missouri, but now pastor in Dale Monthly Meeting, who is also filling appointments at Washington, Kan. The meeting was a strength and encouragement to those who attended.

A communication from Marshalltown, Iowa, says: "The attendance and collections in our Sabbath School are continually growing. Our Union Street Mission Sabbath School has an average attendance of sixty-five children; most of them do not attend elsewhere. The meeting has pledged $116 for missions this year. The workers are covering a great deal of territory. Some are in the Pentecostal Mission, some at the Soldiers' Home, while others attend the jail service and Union Street Mission, besides doing our own work in the meeting. Souls are continually being saved in the prayer meeting and uniting with us. Hepsy Hoag attended Yearly Meeting with a minute and reports a good time. The pastor, William Pilot, is president of the Marshalltown Ministerial Association, and has been actively engaged in the political campaign this fall."

Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting was held at Clinton Corners, N. Y., the 10th and 11th inst. The first evening Zenas L. Martin interested all present in the work in Cuba. The next day he preached a sermon of unusual power upon the "Blessing of Joseph." Thirteen ministers were present, including W. H. Cummins and William Thomas Willis, from Cornwall Quarterly Meeting. A collection of $38 was taken for local evangelistic work. Delegates H. H. Swift, Mary H. Swift and E. D. Gildersleeve gave glowing reports of the Peace Conference recently held in Boston. Willard O. Trueblood gave a "World-wide View" of missions, illustrated by map and blackboard. David S. Taber, of New York, held the large audience in the evening by his masterly presentation of "The Sufferings of Early Friends." Simon N. Hester, of Vermillion Grove, Ill., was also present.

Des Moines Friends observed Rally Day in their Sabbath School, the 13th inst. It was one of those perfect autumn days in which all nature seemed in harmony with the happy spirit of the people. Neat programs were prepared and given out the week before. The meeting house was decorated with autumn leaves, bright berries and flowers. The morning service and Sabbath School were combined. After the opening exercises ten minutes was given to the study of the lesson, when all reassembled in the main room. The Ten Commandments and several Scripture lessons were recited by the younger children. Alice G. Lewis gave a review of the lesson, dwelling largely upon the thought of giving for the repair and continuance of the Lord's work, but above all to keep our bodies in repair spiritually—"for know ye not ye are the temples of the living God." Margaret Burt, who is superintendent of the Primary department, gave the report for the Cradle Roll; she spoke of the sacredness of life and especially of the human soul and of the little ones entrusted to our care. Thirteen new names have been added to the roll during the past year, twelve of these are associate members of the meeting. Appropriate remarks were made by others on the object and thought of Rally Day. Good music added interest throughout.

DIED.

NEWBY.—At Rosedale, Oregon, Tenth month 1st, 1904, Martha C., wife of Samuel Newby, and daughter of Jesse and Ruth Pemberton, in her 60th year. She was a faithful Friend and served as elder for twenty years.

BOOK REVIEW

Studies in the Life of Christ. By William L. Pearson, Ph. D., published by the author, Oskaloosa, Iowa. Price, 35 cents. Many Bible readers fail to grasp the life of Christ in a clear intelligible way. They lack the historical setting and the logical sequence of events. They desire a better understanding of the "Immortal Theme," but do not know just how to approach it. Extensive works are beyond their means and time. Dr. Pearson has cleverly come to the aid of just such people with this little handbook. It guides the reader through the gospel narratives and supplements them with references to Andrews' "Life of Our Lord," and Stalker's "Life of Christ." A Bible dictionary and a Biblical geography will be found helpful for those who can afford them. The outline is neatly printed on alternate pages, leaving space for personal notes. The booklet was originally designed for the author's class work, but it is admirably suited for private study. The outline and reference books are within the reach of all.

6 Per Cent Bonds

The Publishing Association of Friends located at Plainfield, Ind., publish all the Bible School supplies for the Society of Friends in America. They have three (3) weeklies, two (2) monthly magazines, and three (3) quarterlies, with a total circulation of nearly 60,000 copies, consisting of at least 10,000,000 pages of reading matter per year. Their Lesson Helps are used in nearly all the Friends' Bible Schools, and are moulding the thoughts of our children, those who are to cultivate our membership in the future.

In addition to Bible School supplies they are also publishing large quantities of tracts and books as well as doing a general job printing business. The total assets last January was $29,660.27, with liabilities of $4,983.40.

They are issuing 20-year 6 per cent, bonds to the amount of $12,500, to pay off all indebtedness and to erect a building suitable for their purpose. The bonds are secured by at least double the amount of the issue. Write for particulars.

A SILENT PILOT.

Nothing helps so much in the enjoyment of your vacation as a good map. It shows you the streams and lakes you can fish, the mountains you can climb, the places of interest you can visit and the roads you can wheel or tramp. The Lackawanna Railroad has just issued a set of colored maps on a large scale, showing the territory reached by its lines in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These maps give every highway, post office, trolley line and railroad, and are so bound that they can be conveniently carried in the pocket. They are invaluable to automobile tourists and travelers, and should be owned by every one who wishes to be informed on the geography of these three States. The entire set in a neat cover may be had by sending ten cents in stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York City. The edition is limited. Write to-day.

BOOK REVIEW.

Bible Symbols or the Bible In Picture.
By Frank Beard, published by Hertel, Jenkins & Co., Chicago, Ill. Price, $1.50. "Bible Symbols" is the most clever presentation of Bible stories for children which has yet appeared. It is striking and original. Many passages from the Old and New Testaments are so arranged with words and pictures as to appeal to the young mind in a way that cannot fail to interest and instruct. It is the kindergarten method applied to Bible study. The work will make an admirable Christmas present for any child. We predict a wide and growing circulation for the book.

JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

JUST ISSUED FROM THE PRESS OF THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO.

HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE

Told for Young and Old

By JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

Regular Contributor of Notes on Lessons in "Sunday-School Times," and Author of "Revised Normal Lessons," "Studies in Old Testament History," "Studies in the Four Gospels," Etc., Etc.

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presby't'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine."

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminent a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

By special arrangement we are permitted to offer this book with One Year's Subscription to The American Friend for the Price of the Book Alone. $2.50. (ADD 35 CENTS FOR EXPRESSAGE.)

It is not to be supposed that because Christ said "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life" that therefore a man must be narrow in order to enter heaven. Intelligent Christians are of all men the most broad-minded. Narrow-minded, bigoted men are not Christians, but Pharisees.

That every member of both branches of the Michigan Legislature chosen this election should have been a Republican is an extraordinary happening.

The total deposits in all the savings banks of the world, according to latest official information, amounts to over ten and a half billion dollars, contributed by 82,640,000 depositors. Of this total the United States shows aggregate deposits of $3,060,179,000, credited to 7,305,000 depositors.

People will not be compelled to consume the usual amount of wheat at the very high prices now prevailing. The corn crop is next to the largest ever grown and the agricultural department estimates a potato yield of no less than 332,856,000 bushels, compared with 247,127,880 bushels last year.

The sugar consumption of the United States in the current year seems likely to exceed that of any previous year, both in quantity and per capita. The total quantity of sugar brought into the United States in the first nine months, is 4¼ billion pounds, against 3¾ billion pounds in 1903. Of this enormous quantity of sugar, practically one-fourth came from the non-contiguous territory of the United States—Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands; more than one-half came from Cuba, and the remainder chiefly from other islands of the East and West Indies.

The following table shows the per capita consumption of the three kinds of beverages for a number of European countries and the United States. The figures are taken from the latest available sources:

Berea College in Kentucky, which is under indictment for violating a recent State law prohibiting the education of blacks and whites in the same institution, is fortunate in having been able to secure the services of so distinguished a constitutional lawyer as John G. Carlisle, formerly of Kentucky and now of New York. The case is now being tried and, however disposed of in the trial court, will be appealed to the highest State court and then to the United States Supreme Court for final disposal of the question of the constitutional right of a State to draw the color line in private educational institutions.

By mail, 89 cents

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

SOCIAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD

Studies in Human and Divine Inter-Relationship

BY

RUFUS M. JONES, A. M., Litt. D.

PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN HAVERFORD COLLEGE

This is a fresh interpretation of the deepest problems of life. The author tells in straightforward and untechnical language what it means to be a person. He points out that to be a person one must be bound up in organic relation with many persons, and step by step he reaches the discovery that this social relationship stretches from earth to heaven—that God and man are also bound together in organic relationship. He shows how the search for God reveals this. How the great mystics have realized it, how the movement of Quakerism illustrates it, how both Faith and Reason unite to proclaim it, and finally how the New Testament confirms this central idea of the Divine-Human life. The book is full of optimism and good cheer.

THE CALL OF THE CHRISTIAN.

*Oh, then, if gleams of truth and light
Flash o'er thy waiting mind,
Unfolding to thy mental sight
The wants of human-kind;
If, brooding over human grief,
The earnest wish is known
To soothe and gladden with relief
An anguish not thine own;*

*Though heralded with naught of fear,
Or outward sign or show;
Though only to the inward ear
It whispers soft and low;
Though dropping, as the manna fell,
Unseen, yet form above,
Noiseless as dew-fall, heed it well,—
Thy Father's call of love!*

George Fox: An Autobiography

THE STORY OF HIS LIFE TOLD IN SELECTED PASSAGES FROM HIS JOURNAL

Edited by RUFUS M. JONES

Professor of Philosophy in Haverford College and Editor of The American Friend

THE readable and understandable edition of George Fox's Journal, and undoubtedly destined to remain the standard edition. It is also practically the complete edition, though not formally so, for every occurrence of importance is included, and in place of the long papers on controversial religious subjects (which few now read and which none but special students of the subject can read understandingly), an Introduction and series of notes are given which put the reader into Fox's standpoint and into the feeling of the times.

George Fox's life was a thrilling and marvelous one, full of exciting episodes. His activity changed the map of the globe and the history of all nations. Every educated man should feel an obligation to understand the broad results of his work, and every Friend is under a double obligation to know not only these results, but the secret sources thereof.

SHALL WE HAVE PRIESTS?

MOST RELIGIONS have a special class of men called "priests," who have a monopoly of the immediate privileges of religion. Whatever Divine grace is bestowed comes through them. Whoever wishes to hold intercourse with the higher powers must make use of them. The way between heaven and earth is confined to set channels and "priests" are the channels. The colored preacher hit the truth of this view pretty well, when he said, "The water of salvation is free, but you have to pay for the hydrant, and I am the hydrant."

This is a very ancient idea and it has played an enormous part in human history. In one way or another, in a crude way or a refined way, in an open way or in a hidden way, this idea is still revealed in the religious practices of multitudes of people—the mass of people on the globe probably. Religion, like everything else, calls for "specialists" and these specialists who are set apart to "do the religion" for the rest of the world, are what we mean by "priests."

Now it is worth while noticing that this idea and this practice run counter to the entire message of primitive Christianity. In fact a "priest" of the sort described tends to defeat the very idea of Christianity. Grace comes like dew upon the hearts of men, not down some definite channel. One might as well try to make mother-love flow through some third person between the child and the mother as to try to make the reception of divine grace depend on some priestly channel. Such a system denies the reality of the Holy Spirit—except as confined to the lives of a privileged few.

But it is still true that the New Testament is full of the idea of priesthood. Instead of being destroyed by Christianity, its full meaning for the first time appears. Instead of being abolished it is glorified. The Gospel always levels up. The apostolic ideal is not a society without priests, but a society of priests—"a royal priesthood," "a kingdom of priests."

Two things prevent the realization of this beautiful apostolic ideal. First, there are too many persons who find it for their interest to preserve the privileged priesthood—the idea of religion by "specialists." It is too much to expect of human nature that a man should not hold on vigorously to such a "privilege" as that of supplying grace if he once succeeds in securing it. And then busy mortals are glad if they can find some one who will "do their religion" for them and leave them free for the things of life here. This is one reason why the "priest" creeps in sooner or later into almost every form and type of religion.

But there is another reason, a second reason. Those of us who believe in the apostolic priesthood, a religion in which every believer is actually a priest, never carry the idea out in any practical way: We just hold it as a pretty theory. It is strong enough to make us oppose everything which looks like sacerdotalism, but it is too weak to convince humanity that we are a kingdom of priests. We are ready enough to denounce the "privileged priest," to cry against the trade in holy things. But we forget that the way to abolish the low type of priesthood is to exhibit the high type. We do not want no priests—we want all priests. We must level up. Every Christian is a debtor. Every Christian is called to be a co-laborer with God. Every Christian bears the keys, "looses and binds." Every Christian is responsible for the state of society. Every Christian is a hydrant of the waters of salvation. This is the apostolic ideal. How much easier to leave such heavy burdens to priest or pastor or overseers and slip out from under the cross!

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

FEW FOREIGN visitors in recent years have attracted so much attention as our busy nation has bestowed upon Charles Wagner, generally known as the apostle of the simple life. The publishers of his book have sold a hundred thousand copies of it while he has been in the country. Beside this sale of the regular edition, it has been printed in full in the Sunday issue of many leading newspapers, and it has been sold on the streets of all our large cities in a cheap edition in uncounted numbers.

The President of the United States has entertained him and publicly introduced him. John Wanamaker and other men of equal fame in the commercial world have delighted to honor him. He has filled the largest churches and halls wherever he has gone and has found everywhere eager listeners. The period of his sojourn in America was filled with engagements to lecture at two hundred dollars a night, and he has left while the enthusiasm was still high. All this seems to mean that our people are eager for the simple life. Charles Wagner himself is not an extraordinary man. The amount of "thought" in his lectures and in his books is not large. He is not possessed of creative genius. There is no new interpretation of the world, or of life in his work or his words. He has one thing to say, "Be simple, true, sincere toward God and toward men." This is the one idea which it is his mission to express, and the exhibition of enthusiasm indicates that the time is ripe for such a message. Now the humiliating thing is this. Friends have been for more than two centuries and a half the exponents of the simple life. There is more about it in George Fox's Journal than in Pastor Wagner's book. His whole life was consecrated to the idea of simple life in all its phases.

Quakerism might almost be defined as the simple life. Simplicity in the home, in business, in religion, in language, in dress, in the whole round of life. To exhibit this has been our mission. But alas, how feebly we have done it. How low and weak has been our call to the world. This visitor, speaking in broken English, has impressed the idea more in three months than we have in a half century. Friends have sought after him and have been as eager to hear him as though he brought some new truth to light. They have seemed unconscious of the fact that he was doing what God called them to do, that he was flashing out a truth which had been hidden, lo, these many years under Quaker bushels.

We have no word of regret over his splendid success. It is all to the good. We only feel like wearing ashes on our head that we come so near failing in our real mission, which is to give the world the message of simple religion and simple life—a mission laid upon us as a heavenly commission.

Give us this day our daily bread, we pray,
 And give us likewise, Lord, our daily thought,
 That our poor souls may strengthen as they ought
 And starve not on the husks of yesterday,
 Living a life that men shall love to know
 Has once been lived on this degenerate earth,
 And sing it like some tale of long ago
 In ballad sweetness round their household hearth.

Let us have faith that right makes might; and in that faith let us, to the end, dare to do our duty as we understand it.—Abraham Lincoln.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

BY JAMES E. C. SAWYER.

The sources of spiritual health and strength are open to all. There is no necessity for anyone to lead a thin, impoverished and powerless religious life. The Word of God may be read and studied by all, all may hold communion with God, all may be filled with the Holy Spirit, if they will. God is very patient with those who are only partially consecrated; but He desires the whole heart, the whole life. He is ever ready to respond to the longings of those who really hunger and thirst after righteousness. Completeness of consecration, accompanied by faith in the Divine promises, will secure abundant spiritual life and power. None should be willingly weak, when God desires to make them strong. No one would be physically a cripple, if at any moment he could be made perfectly whole; but there are many who go limping along the way of God's commandments who might run in it if they would let Him fill their heart. Many are fearful who might be blessed with full assurance of faith; many are restless who might enjoy serene depths of spiritual peace; many are seeking recreation in doubtful amusements who might be satisfied with the very joy of Christ if they would open all the windows of their being to the sunshine of His love; many have a name to live who are dead, though all the while a glorious fulness of life has been provided for them. God is as ready to bless our souls as the sunshine is to quicken and gladden and beautify the flowers. It is passing strange that so many of the children of God love Him so little and serve Him so poorly. They have not come to the full realization of their filial privileges; with the relation of sons, they are living as slaves.

The greatest need of our time is spiritual life. We are not pessimistic. God has many loving and happy children on the earth to-day, multitudes who love Him with all their hearts; but they are a minority among those who have professed His name. Let the majority of church members be entirely consecrated, and the tide of worldiness that seems invading the church would be rolled back, the spiritual destitution of the crowded districts of our cities would be provided for, the working people would throng the sanctuaries of Christian worship, the rich and the poor would not be socially estranged, glorious revivals would everywhere prevail, and the altars of every church would be crowded with penitents. There is no victory that is not possible to an army of entirely consecrated Christian believers.

Fulness of spiritual life is fulness of Christ-like love. It is strength for service. It is attended with enjoyment, but it is for use. Spiritual purity is at the antipodes from spiritual pride. Holiness is always helpfulness. Perfect love is characterized by humility, patience and self-sacrifice. Those who are entirely the Lord's give themselves without reserve to His cause; their business talent, their money, their social influence, their prayers, their spiritual powers are devoted to the spread of His Kingdom and the salvation of souls. The heart that is full of Christ-like love shirks no toil, shuns no sacrifice. Christ saves men and women by the agency of men and women filled with His Spirit, clothed with His beauty, strengthened with His might, following in His footsteps, doing His will by seeking and saving His redeemed.

Let us not consent to be spiritually diseased, when Christ is willing to make us whole. Whatever others may do, let us give ourselves completely up to His saving power. Let us be wholly His. Let there be no reserve in our consecration, no reluctance in our allegiance, no compromise in our loyalty. If our consecration is now but partial, He will enable us to make it complete, and then He will bless us with fulness of personal salvation, and endow us with power to save others. Oh, that our love for Him might from this moment be a pure flame of joyous and victorious self-sacrifice. The endowment of power is for all who will have it. Let us be content with nothing less than spiritual health, spiritual strength, spiritual joy. Let us be filled with the Spirit. "He shall fulfill the desire of them that fear Him; He also will hear their cry, and will save them." "Wilt thou be made whole?"

JESUS LOVES ME.

BY ALIX.

The subject in Miss Morton's Sabbath School class had been Paul and Silas in prison, and the conversion of the jailer, and with much tenderness and earnestness she had pressed home the lesson of faith that the simple little narrative teaches. When she paused at last, Lillie Lyman said in a dissatisfied tone:

"I cannot understand how just believing can save us. Of course, as it is in the Bible, it must be true; but we all believe, in this class, and yet we are not all Christians. I am sure that I do, yet I cannot feel that I am converted."

"What do you believe, Lillie?" asked Miss Morton, gently.

"Why the Bible, and all that it says about Jesus being the Son of God, and coming into the world to save sinners."

"Do you believe that he saves you, Lillie?"

"No, that is just the point; but even if I did, we are told in another place, 'The devils also believe and tremble.'"

"Do you think that the devils believe that he saves them, Lillie?"

"No," she answered, "they cannot because they are lost spirits."

"For many years I struggled with the same doubts that are puzzling you,—I believed with my mind, just as many of you do to-day. If anyone had asked me, I would have said, 'Of course I believe the Bible, I believe every word in it.' Of course, I believed in Jesus, and yet I knew that I was not a Christian, and that that kind of believing did not help me, for I did not love to read the Bible, and did not care to hear about the Saviour. That text, too, about 'the devil's believing,' often troubled me, until one evening, in a Bible class I was attending, the question was brought up, and one, whom I knew to be a Christian, said: 'Yes, the devils believe,—but what do they believe?' They believe,—they know, that Christ is the king of heaven and earth, into whose hand all power is given; but they know, also, that He is not their Saviour,—that they are lost,—and so they tremble. But we, when we believe, realize that He is our Saviour, who left heaven, and came to earth to save sinners, and since we are sinners, that He came to save us.' Then at once I felt, I am a sinner, so Jesus came to earth to save me. He is my Saviour. My heart took hold of the thought, and all the way home that night I kept whispering to myself, 'He is my Saviour, He is my Saviour,' and I have believed it ever since."

"But surely, Miss Morton," cried Lillie, impetuously, "that cannot be all. We must love Jesus, we must be sorry for our sins, we must work for Him."

"So we must, but we cannot be really sorry, or truly love Him, until we come to Him believing, and realize how much our sins have cost Him, and how great His love is toward us. I will endeavor to illustrate to you what I mean. Suppose you had been born blind, deaf and dumb. Your mother would not have put you away from her. She would have taken care of you, loved you, watched over you, even more than she did her other children, although you would not have known her, or cared for her at all. Suppose that when you grew to be a large girl, all at once you had been made perfectly well, and your eyes had been opened so that you could see her, and your ears unstopped so that you could hear her gentle voice, and you had understood, at last, who it was that had cared for you, comforted you, helped you, clothed you, fed you, do you think you would have found it very hard to have learned to love that mother?"

"Do you not think that you would naturally have felt 'Let me do all I can to help her who cared for me when I was such a poor, miserable object?' Do you not think you would have felt very sorry when you did anything to grieve her? Well, that is just the way she who accepts Jesus as her Saviour feels when she realizes that whilst she was blind, not seeing Him; deaf, not hearing Him; dumb and not having one word to speak in His honor, His ever-watchful love was guiding and guarding her, and the language of her heart is 'What can I render unto God for all His benefits?'"

"Now children, believe to-day, not that Jesus is the Saviour; that is believing as the devils believe, but that Jesus is my Saviour."

"That is the belief that saves, and forms the foundation of a healthy, useful, Christian life."

Some Views on Present Day Topics.

THE MINISTERS ON THE STAGE.

BY MEAD A. KELSEY.

The ministers met in the opera house, in fact they were on the stage—five of them, representatives of the leading churches in the city. But they were not there to play, theirs was serious business. A union revival was in progress and it was evident that a larger place was needed to accommodate the people. Should they get the opera house? That was the question that brought them together at that time and place.

As they sat there the conversation turned upon the preaching of the evangelist. Something had been said about a Pentecostal blessing and the ministers talked seriously about it. Finally the pastor of the largest church in the city said, "I suppose that if a fellow is to get this experience he must give up all worldly societies." The other ministers understood his remark, for he was known to belong to all the leading lodges in the city. So the conversation turned again. Another minister, the pastor of a popular church, spoke, "There's — (naming a well-known young man), once he showed considerable interest in religion and we believed he would soon confess Christ and join the church. Then he joined the lodge and all of his religious interest vanished. I spoke to one of my members about it, one who belonged to the same lodge young — had joined, and said, 'What do you do up in that lodge any way? Since — has joined we can't touch him with a ten-foot pole.' The member dropped his head as he replied, 'I'm sorry to confess it, but that lodge is no place for a young man.'" "Well," said the lodge minister, who had introduced the subject, "there's Mr. L. of my church (a leading business man), he says that if he had his life to live over again he would never join the lodge."

It was an honest hour, and the ministers standing close to each other and to Christ saw things alike. Yes, and they hired the opera house. The revival grew in interest and there were many conversions. Fifty or more joined the largest church. The next we heard of the pastor he had joined another lodge. This was nine or ten years ago. The last we heard of him, his lodge influence had failed to prevent the conviction of his son for burglary and a consequent prison sentence. Possibly if the father had forsaken all, and found his Pentecost, his influence might have been more effectual, only in another way.

The foregoing was brought to the mind of the writer recently by the remarks of a Christian business man, who said, "If I had my life to live over again I wouldn't join any lodge, but I would give all my time and support to the church."

Will not our young men who are allured by the lodges, "think on these things," and at least look twice before they jump!

CAPTIVITY OF THE TEN TRIBES.

2 Kings 17: 6-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The face of the Lord is against them that do evil.—1 Pet. 3: 12.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 5.—Hoshea king. 2 Kings 17: 1-5.
Third-day, Twelfth mo. 6.—Captivity of the ten tribes. 2 Kings 17: 6-18.
Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 7.—Rejected by God. 2 Kings 17: 19-29.
Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 8.—Prophecy of captivity. Hosea 10: 1-8.
Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 9.—Punishment of pride. Isa. 9: 8-17.
Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 10.—Sin of rejection. Matt. 21: 33-43.
First-day, Twelfth mo. 11.—Consequences of sin. Prov. 1: 24-33.

Time.—About 722 or 721 B. C., about six years after the last lesson. The period now studied is contemporary with the early authentic history of Greece and Rome; the latter having been founded in 753 B. C.

Place.—The city of Samaria, the capital of the kingdom of Israel.

Rulers.—Hoshea, king of Israel; Hezekiah, king of Judah; Sargon, king of Assyria.

Prophets.—In Judah, Isaiah and Micah; in Israel, Hosea, up to a short time before the captivity.

The war against Israel was urged by Shalmaneser IV; he laid waste a good part of the country, and besieged the city of Samaria for three years. Before the city surrendered he died, and his successor, Sargon, reaped the fruits of the warfare. This war and its success are recorded upon a tablet found in Nineveh. After reciting the number of prisoners and chariots that were taken, etc., the tablet goes on, "In the place of those taken into captivity, I sent thither inhabitants of lands conquered by me, and imposed the tribute on them which I require from Assyrians."

Isaiah, as we saw in Lesson IX (Isa. 28), seems almost to exult over the fall of Israel in pointing out the moral of her fall. Indeed there seems to have been little sorrow in Judah over the catastrophe. "Israel had begun in hostility to Judah and perished by it at last." We are so accustomed to look upon Judah as preserving the Hebrew nation that we are apt to overlook how much we are indebted to northern Israel. In it flourished Samuel, Abijah, Elijah, Elisha, Micaiah, Amos and Nahum, while much of the earlier historic literature came from northern sources. From the time of this calamity the northern kingdom "and its tribes melt away amid the surrounding nations, and sink into a mixed and semi-heathen race without any further nationality or distinctive history."

6. "Ninth year of Hoshea." 722. "Halah," on a branch of the river Euphrates. "In the cities of the Medes." This was eastward of Assyria, nearly modern Persia. Such a course of deportation was not unusual in antiquity. In this case only a portion was carried off.

7. "And it was so because," etc., R. V. The writer now gives a résumé of the whole history of Israel from the time of the exodus from Egypt. "Had feared other Gods." That is, had given them the place which belonged to Jehovah. "Feared" means here "worshipped."

8. "The statutes." The heathen customs, etc., such as those introduced by Jezebel.

9. "Did secretly." There is some doubt how the Hebrew should be translated. Possibly it means they covered up their idolatrous practices. "High places." Where idols were worshipped, and evil rites performed. "Tower of the watchman." Not of the cities, but of the men who were set to guard the flocks and crops in lonely places. The idea is that in the loneliest as well as in the most populous places idolatry flourished.

10. "Images." Better, "Pillars;" "Groves," better, "Asherim," wooden pillars.

11. "Burnt incense." Equivalent to "sacrificed." The heathen rites were often immoral in the extreme.

12. All this was done contrary to the express command of the Lord.

13. "By the hand of every prophet and of every seer," R. V. Every prophet bore the same message. Strictly speaking, a prophet is one through whom the Lord speaks, while a seer is one who sees visions revealed by God. The books of Amos, and of Hosea are full of warnings, bearing the message indicated in this verse. This was expressed in terms of love, of pleading, of judgment.

14. "Notwithstanding," etc. In spite of all, the people would not alter their course. The metaphor express the acme of obstinacy. "Did not believe in the Lord." Did not trust Him enough to become obedient to Him. "Their fathers." Compare Acts 7: 51.

15. "Statutes." Commands. "Covenant." The law, Deut. 29: 1, 9, 13. "Testimonies." Possibly, the Decalogue, or the solemn declarations against disobedience of God's commands. "Should not do like them." It was one of the great temptations of the Israelites to become and to do like their neighbors, the Gentiles.

16. "Even two calves." Probably referring to those Jeroboam had set up. See 1 Kings 12: 28-30. "A grove." "An Asherah," R. V. "Host of heaven." Included in the worship of Baal the sun god. As under Ahab.

17. "To pass through the fire." "Dedicated their children by fire." That is sacrificed, burnt their children to death in this heathen sacrifice. See 2 Chron. 28: 3; 2 Kings 16: 3; Jer. 7: 30-32.

18. "Therefore." Because of all the above disobedience, and sin. "Very angry." Full of indignation—righteous indignation, and hatred of the sin. "There was none left but the tribe of Judah only." Jerusalem was in the tribe of Benjamin, but it, with a small part, went with Judah, the rest of the tribe went with the northern kingdom. The part was so small that it was not considered worth mentioning.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

2. "The mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small."

HOW TO BREAK BAD HABITS AND CULTIVATE GOOD ONES.

Rom. 8: 1-15.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 5.—The formative years. Eccl. 9: 10.
Third-day, Twelfth mo. 6.—Training. Prov. 22: 1-6.
Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 7.—Sabbath-keeping. Luke 4: 14-16.
Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 8.—Unselfishness. Acts 9: 36-39.
Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 9.—Decision. Acts 24: 24-27.
Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 10.—Piety. 2 Tim. 3: 14-17.

Isaiah summarized our topic in his terse words, "Cease to do evil; learn to do well." The two things go hand in hand. The outcast spirit of evil had but to return to an undisputed possession of the house that was swept and garnished but unoccupied.

The better way to cease is to refrain from the wrong before the habit is formed, for all experience and research demonstrate how persistent are the once formed modes of expression and activity, whether of body, mind or spirit. It is safe to say that on every day of health for forty years an acquaintance of mine has put his hat on at a certain rakish angle because his mother tilted his little caps just so when he was growing out of babyhood.

This is the day of the "auto," the self-motor; but automatism has been illustrated since fish learned to swim and birds to fly without conscious balance or effort. As a principle of life it is of the utmost value, and we need not be afraid of mechanical goodness any more than of mechanical walking. The only precaution needed is that our automatic movements are in the right direction.

The musician reads his score at sight and his fingers move spontaneously to the proper keys, leaving the mind to be employed in the higher spheres of interpretation and expression. Habitual grammatical correctness of speech is an adjunct and not a hindrance to the highest eloquence; and moral and spiritual fitness ought to be no less controlling in our speech, and no less natural in our daily lives.

Professor James gives some practical hints as to the formation of habits:

"Resolve strongly. Launch yourself toward your resolve with as strong an initiative as possible.

"Envelope your resolution with every aid you know.

"Seize the very first possible opportunity to act on your resolution."

This is good advice for the beginning of the Christian life and for each new step of progress in it. It is as far removed as possible from the "tapering off" process that some people talk about—and fail in.

The disdainful one who scorns to protect and defend his resolution will find it sorely bruised and broken, while he who heeds the warning may well look to see the seed strike root downward and bear fruit upward.

The little boy's whistle that "did itself" was the consequence of repeating the act at every opportunity, and, without commending the particular result, we can be sure that he was using correct methods.

Missionary Department.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS OF PHILADELPHIA.

Letters and reports coming from Japan tell of the growing efficiency of the Friends' Girls' School under our care. The number of pupils has also increased, and here is an expression of loyalty to the work which rejoices us. The shadow of the war is over them, and M. P. Bowles speaks in a recent letter of the dread with which they know only too truly that among the slain will be some one dearest those under their care. The horror and wickedness of war seem to be taking hold of many minds. The present, and even more emphatically the future, is ripe for Friends' teaching concerning the kingdom of Christ.

We are full of hope that the Friends who have an interest in the Japan work and many of whom are its liberal supporters will continue this liberality.

Our own country is enjoying peace and unusual material prosperity. Shall we share our abundance with those who are looking to us for help and sympathy? They are suffering and need some light in all this darkness. We want to help them, and to tell them of Him whose perfect service is in the paths of peace.

The association asks for $600 before the end of the year. Our balance on hand is $1.43.

We make these conditions known that all Friends may have the blessed opportunity of sharing in the giving.

Our treasurer is Ellen W. Longstreth, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Eleventh month.3d, 1903.

Dear Friend: School opened Ninth month 5th and we very soon had so many children enrolled, we did not know where to put them. At the close of the second week we began to refuse to enroll any more in the first year, for we already had over 60. Now we don't want to enroll any more in any department. We have over 140 on the list and might have had 200, I am sure, if we had not refused to receive them. It is hard to refuse them, some of the parents plead so hard for us to receive their children, but we could not accommodate more.

We have 22 boarders and expect one more in a few days. About a dozen others applied for places as boarders, but we had no room in the bed-room or dining-room for them. In fact four of the little girls have to put their cots in the school-room at night and take them out of mornings. Some of those we refused to receive, live in places where there are no schools worthy of the name and maybe they will never have an opportunity to go to school if we can't take them. I think we could do a great deal more good if we could have more boarders and less day pupils, for the latter never seem to be influenced much by our religious teaching, and so it seems as if a great deal of our work with them doesn't produce much fruit.

We have twelve girls in the Normal department, but five of them are day pupils and have been very irregular in attendance. Five of them hope to complete the course of study this year and will probably want to teach next year and do some special studying to prepare for the examination which the State gives before it recognizes them as full-fledged teachers. So we are living in the hope that another year we will have plenty of teachers for the primary and intermediate work at least.

The attendance at our Bible school and meetings is larger than ever before. We have nine classes in the Bible school. George C. Levering is superintendent, Miss Lee teaches the women, and I have a class composed mostly of the Normal girls who don't have classes.

Modesto Gonzalez is teaching vocal music to one class, and two of his students have begun to teach other classes, so we hope some day to have better singing than we have had.

W. Irving Kelsey has a Bible class an hour Sabbath p. m. for the most advanced pupils in the boys' school and our Normal girls and teachers. He makes it very interesting, and I hope we will all derive much benefit from it.

The Christian Endeavor Society seems to be growing in interest, and we have received three new active members and three associate members. We are planning to make it a source of great good to all who attend. I hope you will remember us in the Christian Endeavor Societies and pray that God will pour out His Spirit upon us and help us to gather many more into His fold.

Our garden has been quite pretty most of the summer. There are over a dozen nice rose bushes that have grown very rapidly and are almost always blooming. Beside we have had several varieties of cannas, geraniums, hibiscus, cosmos, etc. I don't have very great success with annuals here. It is too hot for them to prosper, and they require too much attention. An old tree trunk with balsam-apples and bitter sweet planted at its base has been very beautiful. Vines grow luxuriantly if they have plenty of water.

Thy friend,
MARY PICKETT.

Congregations must justify their existence. If they only bring people together to be "very much pleased," the lecture bureaus will contract for all that. "Did you worship? Were you edified? Did the Lord speak to you? Did you speak to Him? Do you mean seriously to be pure, honest, upright, generous, manly, holy from what you did and heard to-day?" These are the questions which the best part of mankind feel to be proper, and to which we must have affirmative replies.—John Hall.

THE MYSTERY.

We sow the glebe, we reap the corn,
 We build the house where we may rest,
 And then, at moments suddenly,
 We look up to the great wide sky,
 Inquiring wherefore we were born—
 For earnest, or for jest?

The senses folding thick and dark
 About the stifed soul within,
 We guess diviner things beyond,
 And yearn to them with yearning fond;
 We strike out boldly to a mark
 Believed in, but not seen.

And sometimes horror chills our blood
 To be so near such mystic things
 And we wrap round us, for defense,
 Our purple manners, moods of sense—
 As angels, from the face of God,
 Stand hidden in their wings.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Livery counts for nothing: we must see the heart. No class has the prerogative of simplicity; no dress, however humble in appearance, is its unfailing badge. Its dwelling need not be a garret, a hut, the cell of the ascetic nor the lowliest fisherman's bark. Under all the forms in which life vests itself, in all social positions, at the top as at the bottom of the ladder, there are people who live simply, and others who do not. We do not mean by this that simplicity betrays itself in no visible signs, has not its own habits, its distinguishing tastes and ways; but this outward show, which may now and then be counterfeited, must not be confounded with its essence and its deep and wholly inward source. Simplicity is a state of mind. It dwells in the main intention of our lives. A man is simple when his chief care is the wish to be what he ought to be, that is, honestly and naturally human. —Charles Wagner.

Do right! and thou hast naught to fear;
 Right hath a power that makes thee strong.
 The night is dark, but light is near;
 The grief is short, the joy is long.

Correspondence.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Having moved with our family to this State, perhaps a few lines would be of interest to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. During Fifth and Sixth months last the way having opened, I came to Everett, and held some meetings in a tent in the town which resulted in the organization of a small meeting of forty members, who were received in membership by Muncie Monthly in Indiana. But in looking over this great State we found many families who were once Friends or who are yet Friends, but isolated from any meeting at all. Our hearts were much concerned for these, and we made many inquiries, which resulted in finding representatives of many well-known families of Friends in many different States. There being no meetings of Friends in the State, we felt called to take up the work so far as our ability would permit. With the encouragement of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting and the help of the little church here, we are striving to locate and establish meetings of Friends wherever the way may open. And to do this it would considerably help us, if any Friends who have the address of Friends or others interested in such a work, would send them to us, so that we may open correspondence with them looking to the possibility of a meeting. Our city is about twenty-five miles north of Seattle, on the shore of the sound, and is the end of the Great Northern Railroad, with a possible population of 25,000 people. With all the Oriental and Pacific connections we have a thriving town. Its chief industry is the timber market. It has been only a few weeks since, by the permission and unity of Muncie Monthly Meeting and Winchester Quarterly Meeting, that we attended the opening of a Monthly Meeting here, known as the Everett Monthly Meeting, and have just closed a three weeks' special meeting, with many conversions and renewals. There are about thirty applications for membership which will be considered at next Monthly Meeting, the first Second-day, next month, at 7.30 p. m. Any Friends who may be interested we should be glad to hear from.

Our address is 2219 Rockefeller avenue, Everett, Wash.

CHARLES AND MAY REPLOGLE.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Thinking, perhaps, some echoes from the Baltimore Yearly Meeting might be of interest to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, at large, I send a brief summary of items collected here and there. While the meeting came together under a solemn sense of the loss of several very valuable members, who had passed into the Life Beyond since our last assembly, yet a feeling of uplifting, quiet energy pervaded the atmosphere, touching on every side a determination apparently on the part of many to measure up to every opportunity for service whether great or small.

It was not so much what was done, or caring whether it was seen or unseen of men, but the spirit in which each act was performed "as unto the Lord." Every detail, in a material way conducive to the comfort of Friends, was looked after, although the Hospitality Committee came face to face with new problems and conditions.

The devotional services were largely attended, and characterized by an earnestness seldom equaled. The presence of an unusually large number of young people was most gratifying, and the close attention they paid to the business of the meeting gave promise of future usefulness as they come forward "to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

The memorial to our dear friend, Richard H. Thomas, while expressing, perhaps, all that could be put into words, seemed but a skeleton when we remembered the rich nature of the life it commemorated. The compassion and unutterable tenderness of one of the sweetest spirits that ever "took flesh," the self-abnegation of this faithful follower of the cross of Christ, were lovingly brought out in the many touching testimonies which followed the reading. Words seem so empty in such hours as this, and yet hearts were moved with the desire to pay some small tribute to the rare beautiful nature, whose presence seemed to be in our midst these blessed communion days, sanctifying, even through tears.

May the spirit of the last Yearly Meeting of nineteen hundred and four abide with, and bring forth fruitage fit for the Master's use in the lives of those who had the privilege of attending it.

HANNAH M. POPE.

Baltimore, Md., Eleventh month 19th, 1904.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Marion and Mary Reisinger commenced a series of meetings at Ramona, I. T., the 16th ult.

Susie M. Wagner, formerly of Mooreland, Ind., is now located in the meeting at Anderson, Ind.

Professor A. F. Mitchell is serving as principal of Bloomington (Ind.) Academy. Sixty-six pupils are enrolled.

Daisy Barr held meetings in Traverse City, Mich., Indiana Yearly Meeting, in the interests of Christian Endeavor during Tenth month.

John T. Hadley will do pastoral work in the meeting at Danville, Ind. He was assisted in his labors during the past year by P. W. Raidabaugh.

Joseph J. Mills is now settled with his family in Toronto, where his labors will be concentrated for the coming year. His address is 38 Carlton street, Toronto, Canada.

Thomas Newlin preached the Union Thanksgiving sermon at Western Springs, Ill., last week. The Congregationalists, Baptists and Friends united in holding this union service.

Estella Hammond, of Traverse City, Mich., who has served the Friends at Caven, Kan., as pastor the past six months, has been chosen to fill that place the coming year.

The meeting at Mooresville, Ind., is growing in interest in every department. A series of meetings are now in progress, conducted by Willis Bond, assisted by Zeno Doan and wife.

White Lick Quarterly Meeting, held the 12th and 13th ult., at Mooresville, Ind., was well attended. Thomas C. Brown, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, was present.

Northern District Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia, has concluded to grant the use of their meeting house at Sixth and Noble streets, to a committee which will endeavor to give religious instruction to the children of the neighborhood.

Joseph Bevan Braithwaite, of London, attended German-town Meeting on the 20th inst. and held an appointed meeting in the afternoon at Twelfth Street Meeting House, Philadelphia, at which he gave an instructive address on "Adult Schools."

Western Work says: "Des Moines Meeting claims the honor of increasing their associate membership more than any other meeting belonging to the Yearly Meeting. They had ten new babies in a year, two pairs of twins gave them some advantage."

Thomas W. Inman closed a very successful series of meetings, First-day evening the 20th inst., at Friends' Home, six miles west of Celina, Ohio. The meeting continued two weeks and a number were definitely blessed. Eight have applied for membership.

William T. and Lizzie Morris Gooden, from Whittier, Cal., have been engaged in gospel work in the limits of Willow Springs Monthly Meeting, Mo., since Fifth month last. Many have been revived to more active work and some have been converted and renewed.

Friends at Los Angeles, Cal., have asked Levi D. Barr to remain with them for another year. Under his leadership the Friends of that city have leased Elks Hall for six months for services to reach the public in general. This is a very encouraging movement.

Alfred Johnson, who has just been deprived by death of his life companion, Anna M. Johnson, has left Richmond, Ind., and has gone to spend the winter with his son at Pueblo, Colo. The memory of this faithful woman, who has been called home, is precious to our aged Friend and to the five children who owe a vast debt to her.

Charles Wagner, Professor Koenig, John Wanamaker and Isaac Clothier attended Twelfth Street Meeting, Philadelphia, on Fourth-day of last week. They were all invited to sit on the "High Seat." The boys from the William Penn Charter School were present and Charles Wagner gave a stirring message, mainly directed to the "boys of Philadelphia."

The series of meetings recently held in Greensboro., N. C., by the pastor, J. Edgar Williams; was a time of blessing and spiritual uplift to the membership, and four young people were converted. So far there have been seven applications for membership with the meeting. The series lasted nine days. This meeting now numbers about two hundred and fifty.

Henry T. Coates & Co. have sold to The John C. Winston Company, publishers, their entire wholesale publishing business. The sale includes the plates and copyrights of the entire Coates line, embracing over one thousand volumes of standard works. The magazine, House and Garden, is also included in the transfer. Henry T. Coates is a graduate of Haverford College, and well known among Friends. His long experience and literary taste will be much appreciated by the Winston Company.

President Edmund Stanley, of Friends University, Wichita, Kan., has been commissioned by the University Board of Directors to make an extended trip through some of the eastern Yearly Meetings, in behalf of the interests of an endowment fund. Kansas Friends, having founded this school on a broad and solid basis, keeping it clear of any incumbrance, and in addition having raised near $60,000 cash endowment out of their own means, now look to other philanthropic Friends to join with them to make possible the realization of a Quaker university in the West. To accomplish this there appears only the need of a generous endowment. President Stanley's object will be to acquaint Friends with the real status and possibilities of this school, and to receive gifts for endowment or other general college purposes. He will begin his trip the first of Twelfth month.

Marion and Mary Reisinger closed a series of meetings at Vera, I. T., the 13th ult. Twenty-five sessions were held. Twenty-two made profession of definite blessing. Five have applied for membership with Friends. The meetings were held in a school house located one-half mile from the town limits, which was too small for the attendance. The opening for Friends at Vera is good, and they are the first to take any definite step towards building a meeting house there. It is very much needed. Material is on the ground for the frame and work on the foundation has been begun. The Friends are in limited circumstances financially, and need help to build. It is hoped that those blessed with means may be led to contribute to this work. Any one desiring to do so should direct to Eli Carr, Vera, I. T., Treasurer of Building Committee. Any amount will be thankfully received and very much appreciated.

Bloomington Quarterly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, comprising Coloma, Rush Creek, Marshall, Providence and Bloomington Monthly Meeting, has a membership of about twelve hundred. The recent Quarterly Meeting, held the 19th and 20th ult., at Bloomington, was well attended, especially on the Sabbath. The Friends were favored with the able ministry of Thomas Newlin, dean of Guilford College, N. C., now a student in Chicago University; Peter W. Raidabaugh, president of Friends' Publishing Association, Plainfield, Ind. and Gurney H. Dix, of Fairmont, Ind. Thomas Newlin delivered a lecture on Seventh-day night before the Alumni Association of Friends' Bloomington Academy, on "Social Conditions." It was very much appreciated. Peter W. Raidabaugh delivered a very impressive and instructive address before the Bible School Conference, Sabbath morning, on "Bible Study" and the importance of bringing all classes and especially the young people under its teaching and into the church.

BORN.

WHITE.—To Elmer E. and Winifred E. Pratt White, Tenth month 26th, 1904, a daughter, Frederika.

DIED.

BLAIR.—At Greensboro, N. C., Eleventh month 14th, 1904, Lydia Bowerman Blair, wife of F. S. Blair, of Guilford College, in the 54th year of her age. Her life was full of faith and good works.

BROWNELL.—At the home of his daughter, R. J. Stroud, Salem, Ore., Eleventh month 6th, 1904, Sands Brownell, aged 93 years. He was a life-long Friend, was converted when a boy, and has ever been mindful of suffering humanity. He has been a faithful member of Rosedale Monthly Meeting, Ore., for some years.

JOHNSON.—Anna M. Johnson, wife of Alfred Johnson, of Richmond, Ind., and daughter of John and Elizabeth Thorne, died Eleventh month 15th, 1904, in the 77th year of her age. She was a woman of true spiritual life and she was ready for the great change which has removed her from sight.

HAINES.—Near Lumberton, Ohio, Eleventh month 6th, 1904, Samuel, son of Zimri and Elizabeth Compton Haines, aged 86 years. He united with Friends when a young man; was a faithful attendant of the services for both worship and business; was an elder of Centre Monthly Meeting for a number of years; a member of New Hope Local Meeting, and one of the stable Christian characters of the community.

HADLEY.—At his home in Sterling, Mo., Tenth month 21st, 1904, David W., son of George and Rachel Hadley (both deceased), aged 64 years. In 1888 he, with his family, moved from Bear Creek, Iowa, to Sterling, Mo., where they assisted in organizing the first Friends' Meeting.

WOOD.—At Boulder, Colo., Eleventh month 19th, 1904, Gail, only daughter of Alden and Flora Wood, aged a little less than 2 years.

Events and Comments.

The St. Louis Fair has shown that the inventions and discoveries which are now doing the most to change things are radium, the submarine boat, wireless telegraphy, the aeroplane and automobile.

Secretary Hay has received from the German government a cordial note accepting in principle President Roosevelt's suggestion for another conference at The Hague. Replies have been received from many Powers assuring Secretary Hay of the hearty reception of the President's invitation. When all the acceptances are in steps will be taken to fix a date for the court to meet.

It is reported that Japan will probably soon adopt the "English" (properly the Latin) alphabet, and that a Japanese commission is now investigating the subject. The advance which such a change would insure is hardly to be computed. Not only would it facilitate all commercial relations, but it would also make far easier, and therefore more general, a just appreciation and understanding of Japan and the Japanese.

The statistics of the Provincial Government of Quebec, Canada, ought to be studied and discussed by those who are waging war on "race suicide." Fifteen years ago, when the late Count Mercier was Prime Minister of the province, the Legislature passed a law which provided that the head or father of a family which contained twelve or more living children should be entitled to a free grant of one hundred acres of State land. Since that time grants have actually been given to 3,437 fathers who have proved that they are the possessors of the needful twelve.

The decision by the lord chief justice of England that "passive resisters" are disfranchised by their refusal to pay the school tax, strikes a hard blow at the "passive resistance" movement, but it is one that, after all, is likely to make the movement the more formidable in the end. When a man, for conscience's sake, as he believes, has refused to pay taxes and has had some of his household goods sold at auction by the State as punishment, he has

THE AMERICAN FRIEND

1010 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

As the winter season opens reports of distress among unfortunate classes come from many quarters. United States Consul Boyle, at Liverpool, says that throughout England there are more men out of work and wages are lower than "probably for any period within the last seven or eight years." The peasantry of Connemara, Ireland, are suffering on account of the failure of the potato crop, while sickness, hunger and starvation is the lot of the Sassun population in the Mush district of Armenia. An American Consul says, of the 10,000 survivors of the recent massacre, few have saved anything but their lives. Nearly every house in the region has been ransacked and burned.
The diseases usually following upon fright, exposure, exhaustion and insufficient food are rapidly becoming epidemic, especially among the children.

At a recent meeting of the Zemstvos in St. Petersburg, a petition was formulated which promises to go down in history as the "Magna Charta" of Russia. It was carefully revised and signed by all the Zemstvos except one before it was sent to the Emperor. It reads as follows: "In view of the importance and difficulty of the internal and external situation through which Russia is passing this informal conference expresses the hope that it is the wish of the sovereign to summon freely elected representatives of the nation in order with their co-operation to obtain for the fatherland an evolution of the State in the direction of establishing a new basis of law for mutual co-operation between the imperial authority and the people." Prince Mirsky is leading the movement and the reform party entertains high hopes of its success.

portunity the wise man makes one."—

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses
every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall
"blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur
for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health:
sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says:
"For liver, kidney and blood troubles,
especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood
"purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE

Told for Young and Old

By JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

Regular Contributor of Notes on Lessons in "Sunday-School Times," and Author of "Revised Normal Lessons," "Studies in Old Testament History,"

"Studies in the Four Gospels," Etc., Etc.

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presbyt'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine."

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminent a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

By special arrangement we are permitted to offer this book with One Year's Subscription to The American Friend for the Price of the Book Alone, $2.50. (ADD 35 CENTS FOR EXPRESSAGE.)

THE PERFECT PATTERN.

BY M. E. S. CHARLES.

Our fleeting years are the looms
On which we weave as we run,
Blindly, but surely, life's fabric,
Until the mystic web is done.

Looking above for the pattern,
No weaver hath need to fear;
Keeping your eyes on the Master,
The perfect pattern is there.

And when our tasks are ended,
And the check'd webs are shown,
We shall hear His loving voice Saying to us, "Well done!"

The Mind of Whittier

A Study of his Fundamental Religious Ideas

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

SOCIAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD

Studies in Human and Divine Inter-Relationship

BY

RUFUS M. JONES, A. M., Litt. D.

PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN HAVERFORD COLLEGE

This is a fresh interpretation of the deepest problems of life. The author tells in straightforward and untechnical language what it means to be a person. He points out that to be a person one must be bound up in organic relation with many persons, and step by step he reaches the discovery that this social relationship stretches from earth to heaven—that God and man are also bound together in organic relationship. He shows how the search for God reveals this. How the great mystics have realized it, how the movement of Quakerism illustrates it, how both Faith and Reason unite to proclaim it, and finally how the New Testament confirms this central idea of the Divine-Human life. The book is full of optimism and good cheer.

"PURE RELIGION."

WHAT IS "pure religion," or what we to-day call "simple religion," i. e., religion stripped of all its trimmings and frills? What is the "sign and mark" of genuine religion? "The proper performance of sacred ritual," says one. "Obedience to a light within," says another. "Sound belief in the faith once delivered to the saints," says a third. "It is a connection with God," says a fourth. "It is living so as to get to heaven," says a fifth. "It is a spirit of devotion," adds a sixth. And so on.

The apostle James says that simple religion, undefiled by any addition of human ingenuity, is just purity of heart and practical goodness. (See James 1: 27.) His great forerunner, the prophet Micah, had said almost the same thing. The sum and substance of religion is not in burnt offerings and rivers of oil, but it is this: to deal justly, love mercy and walk humbly before God, i. e., to have a pure spirit and to show practical goodness. (See Micah 6: 8.)

Both of these men were tired of vain performances. They had heard too often the hollow ring of "profession" and "head doctrine" with no practice to go with them. They wanted something real—something that would work here and now. And so they cut off all the fringes and reduced religion to a state of heart and a manner of life. Of course this is right as far as it goes. James at a stroke breaks into fragments the theory that religion consists in believing a lot of truths—why, he says, "the devils believe," but that does not make them religious. They have emotions, too. They are scared and tremble, but that does not make them religious. Religion does not begin, according to him, until you practice your faith. You show your faith by your works, you exhibit your inner condition, your heart, by the way you act toward men. He is not afraid of "creaturely activity." He is rather afraid of empty creed and hollow profession.

But do we not all feel that this foregoing account makes religion something less, something smaller than it really is? A pure heart and practical goodness are splendid assets. Blessed is the man, blessed is the woman, blessed is the child who are unspotted by the world and who practise goodness wherever they go. The religion which bears visible fruit is a good kind to graft from. But is that all of religion? Is that the beginning, the middle and the end? No, it is not. To understand your Alpine stream you must go farther than the top of the mountain down which it runs. You must go back to the ocean, which is the source of every rill, brook or river.

Religion, pure and simple, cannot be defined with God left out. It is possible to give all one's goods to feed the poor, without being religious. It is possible to give one's body to be burned for some good "cause," without having any "pure religion." Religion begins with faith in God. It is born when the soul discovers Him, has confidence in Him and goes to living in this confidence or trust in Him. All "right belief" must spring out of this primal trust in the living God, or it does not belong to religion. All practical goodness which deserves to be called religious must flow out of this union of soul with God. The purity of heart which counts for religion is the purity which comes from "seeing God."

Simple religion, then, is the life of God in the life of man. It is neither "belief," nor "good works." It is both, and it is more than both. It is a life of purity and practical goodness flowing from contact with God and simple trust in Him, as Christ has said, "He that believeth in me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." That is religion, pure and simple.

THE W. C. T. U. IN CONVENTION.

THE PASSING of years and the loss of famous leaders do not seem to have dampened the zeal and earnestness of the greatest association of women, united for the destruction of the saloon, the world has ever seen. The formation of an organization of women to guard the home and to purify life was a happy idea and it has borne fruit far beyond the dreams of the first founders.

At first the "union" embodied one main idea, the destruction of the saloon, but of necessity the scope of its work widened as its numbers grew and now it deals with almost everything in modern civilization that is "jarring, harsh and out of tune." If there is a plague spot anywhere, this "union" of women is against it. If vice organizes to protect itself, it soon discovers that this "union" has a "department" organized against it, and public speakers all over the country, very likely all over the world, will be attacking it. In city and backwoods, in villages and at cross-roads, members of this "union" are watching and working and praying in behalf of good morals and healthy social life. They deserve a hearty "God speed."

This week they are assembled in convention in the city of Philadelphia. Delegates are present from every State in our Republic. The sessions of the convention opened with more than a thousand women wearing the emblematic white ribbon present. The president, Lillian M. N. Stevens, presented a strong address which decidedly moved all who listened to it. It was a review of the past gains and a call to future service. She outlined the following program of work for the immediate future:

The fact that prohibition is so much a part of the warp and woof of the Women's Christian Temperance Union makes it needless to urge unceasing effort in every locality for securing prohibitory laws against the liquor traffic, and their maintenance and enforcement where they exist.

I recommend that we continue to make a vigorous effort for the enactment by Congress of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill to control the interstate traffic in intoxicating liquors.

For the passage of the McCumber bill, forbidding liquor selling in government buildings; this bill seeks to suppress liquor selling at the National Soldiers' Homes.

The bill to prohibit the traffic in opium, except for medicinal purposes, in the entire jurisdiction of the United States, and for the provision of government treatment for the habitual victims of this drug.

For the exclusion of Senator Smoot from the United States Senate and an antipolygamy amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I recommend to send from this convention an appeal to President Roosevelt begging that the sale of liquor for beverage purposes be prohibited in the Panama district now under control of the United States.

For the states not having a prohibitory law to endeavor to secure the enactment of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor within a radius of three miles from all army posts or government reservations.

That the various states shall work for a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes; also for a law prohibiting the sale to minors of tobacco in any form.

We must continue to protest against the union of Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory as one state unless the sale of intoxicants is prohibited.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE of England has rendered a decision to the effect that all dissenters who refuse to pay the school tax rate under the new educational system are thereby disfranchised. Our readers will remember that many Friends have felt compelled by their consciences to make a "passive resistance" to that law and have refused to pay the tax rate. By the construction of a statute more than three hundred years old all these "passive resisters" will now be deprived of their right to vote at parliamentary elections.

THE PERSONAL ELEMENT IN THE VOCAL MINISTRY.

BY JOHN WILHELM ROWNTREE.

I think we shall all recognize that the question of the vocal ministry cannot be adequately considered in a water-tight compartment, for it must be the expression of the man in his entirety;—of his attitude towards God and his fellows, of all he knows of God in the universe, and of the human heart, of sin and death, of love and life.

Imperfections of character, flaws in the thousand relations between the soul and its environment, mar or limit the message, however true and fitting the spoken words.

Accepting this view let us consider certain points affecting the personal element in the minister's vocation.

First of these I would place Vision.

We must ride with Paul to Damascus. We must see and know God in Christ, and life as He interprets it for us. We may have been of the strictest sect of the Pharisees and yet have kicked for years against the goad. The vision will reveal this secret of the heart, and teach us our need of a renewal, that all creation must have a new smell, and the harmony of love overcome the dissonance of selfhood.

Second, Consecration.

The heavenly vision calls for obedience. We have encountered a great light which has interpreted to us at once our true self, and the love and passion of the Cross. This is our summons, and our answer must be service.

But many mistake the meaning of consecration. They think that as consecration is the offering of our faculties to God, so all the responsibility for using them is His. This is the fallacy which has so often lurked in the teaching of the Inner Light. Consecration means the concentration of the energies of mind and soul upon their improvement for service. It is a frank recognition that God's work of redemption is a co-operative work, demanding the agency of man for its completion. To be spiritual is not to be slipshod. Consecration therefore includes the disciplined training of the mind, the right apportionment of time, the careful selection of our reading towards a definite end. It means what the permanent settlement at Woodbrooke means, the combined potency of prayer and of thought.

Third, Sympathy.

We must sit where the people sit. Here I am afraid we often fail. We are most of us bundles of prejudice, theological, social, political. And yet sympathy, spiritual and intellectual, is all important. We must try fairly to understand the social condition, and the intellectual atmosphere, of the persons we would help. We must know something of the current thoughts of the day, not polemically but sympathetically. The man who tilts his theological lance, tipped with the venom of controversy, at modern thought, or the higher critics, or the revival preacher, is not helping but retarding the coming of God's kingdom.

And perhaps the best training-school in which sympathy may be learned as a lesson is the Pastoral. One great weakness of Quaker ministry is its frequent dissociation from pastoral work and care. Remember that the magnetism of a messenger lies in his sympathy, and sympathy is born of knowledge.

Fourth, Humility.

Pride in a gift is its destruction. The office of minister is one not of supremacy but of service. No thought of self should deflect the inward eye from the end and purpose of God,—the redemption of man.

"Did I speak well?" "What do people say of me?" "Were people pleased?" These may be the thoughts of personal vanity, and go not seldom with that resentment of criticism which is the testimony to spiritual unfitness. The most victorious quality of the minister of God is his humility.

Fifth, Courage.

These days of invertebrate thinking and luxurious pleasures demand courageous speaking. It is a long time since Sydney Smith startled his congregation of judges and lawyers in York Minister, by declaiming, "Woe unto you lawyers!" The frank condemnation of social sins and intellectual errors, uttered in scorn of opinion but in the spirit of love, is too rare in the Christian ministry.

There is no more frequent taunt flung at the preacher than the taunt of cowardice and evasion, and in measure I fear it is just. We are too frightened of uttering our true thoughts. In chapel and meeting house a mischievous tradition of religious phraseology has grown up, which destroys the freshness and directness of the preaching, and which it requires some courage to disregard. As Sir Edward Fry, in his essay on sermons, has remarked, "the ordinary preacher is afraid to call a spade a spade; he would rather describe it as 'that instrument of agriculture with which our first father labored when, by the providence of God, he was called on to till the garden of Eden.'" We need, I think, to imitate John Woolman, who combined the sweetness of true humility with an unconquerable courage.

Sixth, Variety.

It is a bad symptom when, after the first few words of a sermon, the congregation remarks to itself mentally, "Oh, I know what's coming now!" And yet how often this is true. The prepared or unprepared sermon falls alike under this condemnation. Indeed, the prepared sermon, when it is machine-made, is often the most at fault.

We want the imagination which springs from sympathy, and the freshness which springs from thought. We must bring all things into the treasury. It is often said, "Oh, the simple gospel is all we need," but that depends upon what is meant. To deal in the obvious, because thinking is too much trouble, is to offer unconsecrated ministry. We want rather that variety of presentation which does not obscure or replace the Gospel, but which saves us from the dead monotony of repetition.

I know a minister who keeps a pocket-book. If a thought strikes him, whether reading or in a reverie, if he notices a telling sentence, passage or illustration, he makes a note or copy of it. When the pocket-book is full the contents are transferred to a commonplace-book properly indexed according to subjects, and are constantly available for reference. This is surely an excellent example of that proper discipline which should govern the life of the preacher, and a wise recognition of the efficacy of human forethought, which nowise destroys the liberty of the Spirit.

Seventh, Diligence and Patience.

Diligence in the face of apparent unresponsiveness, and in labor that seems fruitless,—patience that means sustained interest even if utterance be infrequent.

We cannot serve any cause haphazard. It is the belief of some that, because the Spirit bloweth where it listeth, a succession of evanescent "concerns" for the meeting and the society must be more spiritual than a continuous exercise of heart and mind. But God does not work spasmodically. He works continuously. There are indeed times when the Divine power is more richly manifest than at others, but there is no real pause in the work of God. We need more consecrated, sustained and penetrating thought, directed not only to the vocal ministry, but to all Christian service, and it will be out of such patience that the most enduring work will grow.

Eighth, Sacrifice.

Our considerations, and many others which we have not space to consider, must receive the endorsement of sacrifice. Without this none are valid. No scheme can evade the necessity, none offer a substitute for this vital quality of all true labor. But self-sacrifice must take a definite and practical form, it must take cognizance of the needs and conditions of service. In the past, Quakerism has leaned upon an inadequate conception of the Inner Light. It has unduly depressed the exercise and diminished the place of the reasoning faculties. It has forgotten that the direct revelation of God's will is not fully effective apart from the fitness of the instrument to receive or act upon it,—or rather it has regarded such fitness in too narrow a sense, and shunned, whether from mistaken interpretation or fleshly weakness, that needful discipline of the mind which supports, directs and renders more efficacious the no less needful labor of the soul.

While Quakerism, with its just emphasis upon the inwardness of religion, has been fruitful of saints and rich in the practical mercy of its wide philanthropy, it has been singularly weak in its constructive thought. The brief promise of its early days has been disappointed, and the ministry which swept England, from end to end, so far from conquering the world, has proved impotent to save even the Quaker fellowship from decay.

We are willing now to face the facts, and refuse any longer to be lulled by the siren praises of those who admire the Quakers for what they once were. We must live in the present and think of the future. The call is coming to us again as it came to Fox, as urgent, as exacting, as loud.

All is not well with the world. The belief in force, the love of ease, the lust for sensationalism, the superficiality of emotional or formal religion, the parasitism even of the religious, these are with us in their modern dress, even as they were with Fox in the garb of seventeenth century thought and practice.

The question of the ministry is in part a question of equipment, but it is still more a question of spiritual temper. What is our attitude towards life? Do we see things as they really are, or as our contemporaries would have us believe? Do we pierce to the inward motive, the inward fact? Do we refuse to be swayed by prejudice, by the social environment in which we have been reared; do we dare to cut ourselves loose from convention and speak out the unpalatable truth?

Without vision we shall perish, without sacrifice the vision will glow and fade, an unavailing dream.

There is one aspect of the question before us upon which I can only touch. It has been asked, Can laymen, especially those faithful to the manifold duties of citizenship, under the necessity of working for their living, meet, in any adequate measure, the exacting demands of the ministry of the Word?

Let it be acknowledged that the problem of the Free Ministry is not only a spiritual, but also a practical problem. We have it yet to solve. There are needs of the human heart which are not met by prophecy and exhortation, but by teaching, and the ministry of teaching demands a trained and ordered mind. We must tackle this difficulty honestly and bravely, and so long as we compromise nothing of our message and testimony we must not shrink from properly safe-guarded measures, which will grant to those who feel the call the means of fulfilling their service. Nor must we in any case hesitate to recognize the diversity of gifts, and the place and function of the vocal ministry in the economy of the Church.

But again nothing can avail without sacrifice, neither silence nor ministry, organization nor equipment.

The message of the Inner Life, which is the message of Quakerism, is strenuous, and embraces the whole energies of the soul. But we cannot call men back to the verities of the Spirit unless we ourselves have won them and possess them.

These must be won in worship. The strength of a Quaker meeting lies in its truth of spiritual apprehension, and in the reality and earnestness of individual exercise. Let all ministry be to this end, seeking as its definite aim the conversion of men from the love of self to the love of God in Christ, from the torpor of indulgence to the passion and the glory of service.—The British Friend.

"It is better to live a good life from the start than to be able to tell some wonderful story of conversion in old age."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EACH HIS OWN LAMP.

BY J. R. MILLER.

One of the most serious thoughts about life is its individuality. Paul puts it in a sentence when he says, "Each man shall bear his own burden." We are in danger of forgetting this truth. We think so much of our lives in their mutual relations that unless we are careful, we lose sight of our individual responsibility. The duty of helping each other is so impressed upon us that we sometimes forget that in the deepest experiences of life we cannot help each other, nor can we receive help from others. Each one has to stand for himself. Each one should think of himself as an individual, standing alone before God, having no companionship in the most vital affairs of life, and should seek to realize the responsibility of this position.

When we think of it, the truth readily becomes apparent. No one can choose for us; each one must make his own decisions. We must take our own place before God and meet our own responsibilities. No one can believe on Christ for us. Others may intercede for us when we have sinned, but until we ourselves, in penitence and contrition, repent, confess and seek forgiveness, forgiveness will not come to us. Four men carried a paralytic to Jesus, and we are told that when Jesus saw their faith He forgave the man's sins and then healed him. But we know well that the sins were not forgiven because of the faith of the four friends who carried the man. There must have been in his own heart a sense of unworthiness, a confession of sin, a cry of forgiveness, or Jesus would not have said to him, "Thy sin are forgiven thee." No one but ourselves can consecrate our life to God. No one can obey the commandments for us. No one can do our duty. All about us may be those who are busy and active in God's service, keeping His commandments and doing His work, but this avails nothing for us; we must do God's will for ourselves.

Each one of us must get the love and mercy of God into his own heart by a personal faith in Christ. Each of us must have a lamp of his own and must have it filled and burning. No one can walk in the light of another's torch. No matter how holy a wife is, how earnest she is in her prayers, how full of God's love her heart is, her husband cannot stand in the light of her lamp; he must have his own lamp or walk in darkness. In our Lord's parable, five of the ten virgins had a reserve of oil and their torches blazed out brightly on the midnight darkness. Why could not the other five have paired with these, two walking beneath each torch? But each one must have her own light or be left outside the shut door. In the parable, the foolish virgins, in their hour of need, cried to the wise, "Give us of your oil; for our lamps are going out." But we know the answer, "Peradventure there will not be enough for us and you." Perhaps it seems to us that the wise ought to have given part of their oil to the poor foolish ones.

There is said to be in a private gallery in Boston a fine representation of this scene in marble. A wise virgin is kneeling, trimming her lamp. A foolish virgin, with a most pathetic expression, is begging oil from her sister. The wise, however, with inexpressible sadness, lifts up her hand as if saying, "Not so." It is related that a great literary man, standing before this group, said: "She ought to have given her the oil." Perhaps many of us have felt as we have read the parable, that the wise virgins ought to have shared their supply. Does this refusal seem ungenerous? Our blessed Lord everywhere in His Gospel teaches us that we should give to every one that asketh of us, that the strong should bear the burdens of the weak. Why does he represent the wise virgins as seeming so unpitiful?

A deep moral truth lies in this part of the parable. The grace of God is something which cannot be given by one to another. There are points in life at which no one can help his friend. For example, two young men pass through their school-life together. One is diligent, faithful, industrious, improves every opportunity, and stands at length on the threshold of active life, well equipped for its duties. The other loiters and trifles, is not diligent, wastes his time, does not improve his privileges and opportunities, and faces his lifework at last without any adequate preparation for it. The one takes up his burden and bears it nobly. He has prepared himself for it. But the other staggers under the load and cannot carry it. In his despair, he appeals to his friend for help. Gladly would the other help him, but it is impossible. He cannot give him his trained powers, wisdom, discipline of mind, skill of hand, that alone would fit him for his duty.

The same is true still more positively in moral and spiritual life. Character is personal and cannot be given by one to another. The woman who has, through years of heart culture, acquired control of her temper, cannot impart her sweetness of spirit to her sister who needs the same gentleness for a great emergency, and who has not acquired it for herself. The brave soldier cannot share his courage with the pale, trembling recruit who falls in the battle by his side. If one is in great temptation and lacks strength, and his friend beside him is strong and victorious, the friend cannot give him of his strength to help him to overcome. If one is in sorrow, and un comforted, another beside him who has learned the lesson of divine comfort, cannot give his friend of his peace to calm and quiet his perturbed spirit.

Then, in the darkest hour of all, when one comes to die, he cannot get grace from the friends who stand about him. Gladly would the godly and the saved give of their peace, their patience, their faith and hope, to their friends who are perishing in death's waters. But they cannot do it. The most gentle, loving mother cannot give of her preparation for death to her child dying without hope on her bosom. Sometimes we read that one with fulness of life permits his veins to be opened and a portion of his warm, healthy life-blood drawn out and poured into the empty veins of a friend, to save him from death. But there can be no such transfusion in moral and spiritual life. You can refill your expiring lamp from no other one's vessel. The spirit of God must be in your heart. You must have Christ for yourself. You must see the Lamb of God with your own eyes. You must have your own oil for your lamp or it will go out in the darkness.

ADDRESS OF JOSHUA L. BAILY AT THE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

[Joshua L. Baily was introduced as ex-president of the National Temperance Society.]

You have already heard from a live president of the National Temperance Society, and one who is only a "has-been" has small claim upon your consideration. I am, therefore, the more deeply sensible of the cordiality of your greeting.

As I look over this great assembly of Christian temperance women, memory carries me back to the little company of women with whom I and a few other gentlemen were privileged to meet in the basement of a church which then stood on the site now occupied by the Betz Building. It was a little more than thirty years ago. The intelligence had just reached us of the very remarkable work of the women crusaders in Ohio, and a common sympathy had drawn us together. That little meeting in the church basement was the birthplace of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Philadelphia. If there are any ladies here who were members of that small company, I want to unite with them in reverent thankfulness that their little work of faith and devotion has been blessed so abundantly. In the early years of your history your motto was "For God and Home and Native Land," but under the influence of a broader Christianity you have changed the phraseology to read "For God and Home and Every Land," and spreading out like a great tree your branches have covered the earth and millions have found shelter under its beneficent shadow.

I did not have the privilege of being here yesterday, but I read with profound interest the newspaper reports of the admirable address made by your president, Mrs. Stevens, in which she set forth what had been accomplished by you in the recent years, and mapped out for you what was calling for your service in the various departments of your work for the near future. Although it is two years since I resigned my official connection with the National Temperance Society, my interest in the work of that organization has in no wise abated, and at the same time I have followed with great satisfaction and admiration your splendid achievements, and I am glad to have this privilege of referring to some of them. It was largely, if not chiefly, through your strenuous efforts that the House of Representatives at Washington was purged of one who lived in defiance of the laws of God and man, and I want to express the hope that your further persistent efforts will in like manner purge the Senate; I am glad also to know that you have a further step in view in the introduction into Congress of a constitutional amendment which, if adopted, will forever prohibit polygamy wherever the flag of the Union floats. You have not succeeded in banishing drunkenness from the army, but you have shut the door of the canteen—that baleful source of temptation that confronted the young soldiers in the barracks—but I think you have occasion to bear in mind that it is one thing to win the field and quite another thing to hold it, for the enemy is watching his opportunity to retake what he has lost should he find that you are not on guard.

Will you permit me to commend to your continued care the “National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers”? In all of these, excepting the one at Marion, Ind., there are “beer halls,” as they are mildly called—veritable saloons, however, for the sale of beer—kept open from morn to eve, excepting at the noon hour, and where beer is sold with such little restriction that many of the men are kept in a continual state of stupidity. I have been much interested in these homes for a number of years; have visited all but the one in California several times, and as late as September last visited all of those this side of the Mississippi River. The soldiers are well fed, well clothed and comfortably housed, and I have no hesitation in saying that the respective governors of these homes are sincerely desirous of promoting the welfare of their wards and to minimize the evils from which they suffer; but these governors do not make the laws by which the homes are governed, and there are many regulations and circumstances which are beyond their control. Some of these homes (many of you who have visited them know all about it) have in the immediate vicinity groups of little houses, and in some instances directly fronting the gateway, chiefly drinking saloons and places of the vilest immoral resort. These places are supported chiefly by the old soldiers of the homes. That it is possible for these dens of vice and immorality to exist in the immediate proximity of the homes is a national disgrace. At two of the homes, by state law, saloons are prohibited within a circuit of one mile, but at the others there is no such restriction. The governor of the home at Milwaukee, where there are about twenty-six hundred soldiers, told me a few weeks ago that he had petitioned the Legislature of Wisconsin for the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants within the radius of a mile, but that the influence of the Milwaukee beer interest had defeated the measure. It seems altogether unlikely that any effective relief can be secured by invoking further state legislation. I think that there was suggested here yesterday a most effective remedy; that is, by appealing to Congress for a law prohibiting the sale of all intoxicants within the radius of three miles of every United States military post and reservation, to include also the soldiers’ homes, applicable to all alike; and I trust that vigorous efforts will be made not only by your Union, but by all other temperance organizations to secure this important law.

And no efforts should be relaxed to secure the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver Bill to vest control of interstate traffic in the police power of the respective states. We should also endeavor to secure effective—I emphasize the word effective—prohibition for the Isthmus of Panama, and we should oppose with all our might the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as a state unless the prohibition of the traffic in intoxicants is made a sine qua non. There are other objects of legislation which may demand our aid, but time will not permit me to enumerate them; but there is a matter to which I would call your very earnest attention, and as to which no legislation is needed. I refer to the drinking customs of society. There has no doubt been a great abatement of the drinking customs in some localities and among some classes, but I think that you cannot have failed to note that drinking is on the increase among fashionable people and among what is called the higher social set, especially in some of our large cities and where the example is most harmful. It is a fact profoundly to be deplored that many young people, the most gifted and promising, not only among the young men, but too oft among the young women also, are being enslaved by the fascination of the wine cup. There is great need for a revival crusade against our drinking customs.

Like the Japanese at Port Arthur, you have taken some of the outposts of the enemy and silenced many of his guns, but the most formidable stronghold of all—the drinking customs—still confronts you. Unlike these indomitable Japs you do not depend on carnal weapons, but in the kindness and meekness and peaceable spirit which you Christian ladies know how to command, much is possible in the way of prevention and rescue.

It has seemed to me, ladies, that there is great need in our day to bring the doctrine and practice of total abstinence more to the front. Let me not be misunderstood; I do not hold that total abstinence is the only virtue or that it is “a cure-all” for all the diseases of the body politic, but I do believe that only in proportion as it becomes the common practice of life can we look for any radical and permanent reform. No matter what path of humanitarian effort we attempt to tread (and I will use in part the language of a speech I heard at the National Temperance Conference in London in 1900) “the lion in the way which must be met and slain is the insatiable, voracious and carnivorous enemy, strong drink.”

I am very fond of playing ten-pins, and I have always found that if I wanted to bring them all down I must aim my blows at the foremost pin. The drinking custom of society, in my judgment, stands to-day in the foremost position, and against this we must hurl our best energies, and when that falls a legion of evils will tumble down with it.

There is no life so vile, but down somewhere under all the rubbish of sin, there is a human heart throbbing, and some explorer, led by the Divine Spirit, may yet bring it to light.—United Presbyterian.

Issued Monthly, under the care of the

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS, OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

All communications should be addressed to

ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, 343 E. Main St., Haddonfield, N. J.

The Monthly Meeting of the Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia, held the 28th ult., was alive with enthusiasm. Seven thousand two hundred and fifty pages of literature have been distributed the past month, and twenty-five portions of scripture-leaflets have been sent to Oklahoma, Kansas, Indiana, and to factories, railroad stations, and numerous schools in Philadelphia.

The committee's attention was called to the "Hamilton bill," now before the United States Senate, which provides for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territories as a state, but fails to make provision for the continuance of the present treaty right which protects the Indian tribes against the liquor traffic. A letter calling attention to this failure to fulfill a sacred pledge was directed sent to Pennsylvania and New Jersey Senators. Another to congressmen in behalf of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill and one to assemblymen at Harrisburg, Pa., asking for a local option measure, were directed sent out.

A good many people have a notion that, when they read the government statistics detailing the hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of liquors and wines which pass under the review of the Internal Revenue Department and are taxed, they have a pretty accurate statement of the liquor business in this country. They are wrong; they know how much genuine whisky, distilled according to law, is turned out, but there is no record of the enormous quantity of vile liquors turned out by unscrupulous rectifiers or made in the cellars of unscrupulous purveyors of liquors to the consumer.

The Federal laws are vitally defective. They hold strictly to account the distiller whose product must be passed by the government officials, but the rectifier has a free foot, and may place anything on the market and call it pure whisky. Many of the spurious brands are harmless, but many a brand called, for instance, "pure rye whisky" is anything but that, and the purchaser of it does not receive that which he pays well for.

The remedy suggested to head off these imitations is a statute compelling the real and spurious article to be labelled as such. The passage of the "pure food bill" now pending in Congress will, Dr. Wiley thinks, aid any laws that the States now have or may enact in the future concerning this matter. We should suppose it to be as easy to head off bogus whisky as bogus butter. Perhaps those who entertain the most extreme views with respect to the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages would rather have them made worse than better, thinking that the deadlier they are the more they will be avoided; but as a matter of fact the reverse is true. The adulterated article makes drunkards more rapidly than the pure; so until society gets upon a total abstinence basis it is in the interests of health, decency and order that the spurious articles should be restricted as much as possible.

Before this reaches the reader the annual meeting of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Philadelphia will be passed with its far-reaching results, carried home by more than five hundred delegates throughout the United States. John G. Wooley says: "The situation is full of hope. Of this there are four chief symptoms: (1) The growing desire for full and accurate information on the temperance question; (2) the increasing spirit of co-operation among the enemies of the saloon; (3) the revival of the doctrine of home rule as related to the subject; (4) the independent voter."

The press of the country gave pages to reports of the convention; and the Philadelphia Press in an editorial on "The Temperance Situation," said:

"This is one of the live moral and economic issues of the day, and because it is most pronouncedly the former, there is seemliness in the practice of the churches in setting apart one day of the year as World's Temperance Sunday.

"One does not need to be old to be able to remember when the temperance cause bore a very different face from that which it wears to-day. Then it was the cause of an earnest-souled few, who, however, made up in zeal—not to say intolerance—for what they lacked in numbers. To-day a majority of the people of this country are probably total abstainers or at least friends of temperance.

"The temperance reform has extended its front and varied its tactics. While to-day there is a renewed emphasis laid upon the pledge-signing which was a feature of the early days of the movement, the greatest stress is put upon the political, economic and physiological sides of the movement. The great corporation, with its unsentimental methods, has enlisted in a propaganda which once was maintained only by such glowing reformers as Father Matthews and John B. Gough. The school book has been converted to the cold water cause, while local prohibitory laws have been enacted in all parts of the country. Society has been led to frown upon the drunkard, and it is no longer the total abstainer who is counted 'queer.'

"These signs of the progress of temperance must be hailed with gratification by all lovers of the race. In the train of sobriety follow the manifold blessings of industry, prosperity, domestic felicity, clean citizenship, the observance of law and the pursuit of high ethical and spiritual ideals. The accessions to the ranks of temperance reformers from all sorts of unexpected sources—such, for example, as a bartenders' total abstinence society—are all additions to the forces that are at work in this land, and with steadily increasing power, for the uplifting of the type of American citizenship. It is not enough that the United States is already at the head of all the great nations of the earth with respect to temperance progress; she is steadily forging ahead toward the goal of general sobriety for all her people."

THE ARMY CANTEEN.

In his exhaustive statistical study of the canteen and no-canteen periods, William E. Johnson concluded as follows: Summarizing the comparative records of the two systems we find that since the canteen has gone—desertions have decreased 33 per cent.; deposits of savings have nearly doubled; court-martials have slightly decreased; admissions for alcoholism have decreased 33 per cent.; admissions to the sick list have decreased 20 per cent.—St. Louis Advocate.

A MOTHER'S OPPORTUNITY.

It has been said: "In the divine economy, mothers and homes determine the character and conditions of any people. Alike in heathen and in Christian lands, as are the mothers so are the people, or in other words, no people rises higher than the mothers."

To the mother in civilized lands comes boundless opportunity to help the world. From her own hearthstone she can radiate an influence that will bless not only her own home but other homes.

We have heard of some mother's boy who, though wealth, good parentage and innumerable blessings were his portion, fell into wickedness and crime. When this boy was committed to prison he cried in despair, "The drink brought me here," and later he confessed to the chaplain, "I took my first drink at my mother's table."

It is not enough that the parents be merely temperate; but precept upon precept must be given; effort upon effort made; vigilance of the direct character is imperative for us all.

SUCCESS OF WORLD-WIDE PLEDGE-SIGNING CRUSADE.

The outlook is bright and intense. The evidence of this is the following:

First—Since November 23, 1902, when the National Temperance Society instituted the "World-Wide Pledge-signing Crusade," nearly 4,000,000 of temperance pledges have been sent out from this office to the following countries: Russia, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Bulgaria, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, France and Great Britain; to Pretoria in the Transvaal, and Natal in South Africa, to Calcutta, Bombay, Rangoon and Maulmain in India and Burmah; to Tokio, Nagasaka and Yokohama in Japan; to Canton, Hong Kong and Shanghai in China; Manila in the Philippines; to New Zealand, New South Wales and Melbourne, Australia; the West Indian Islands and Canada, and every State and Territory in the United States.

As a result of the combined forces of temperance workers in our country 30,000,000 of our citizens are living under prohibition, either in State prohibitory laws, or local option laws. We have succeeded in defeating every attempt to legalize Sunday opening of saloons in New York and elsewhere.

Second—The Liquor Dealers' League has raised $5,000,000 to place ten picked men as lobbyists in Congress and in every State Legislature in the United States to secure the repeal of all restrictive or prohibitory laws and the passage of laws favoring the trade. The fight is intense.

Field Secretary National Temperance Society.

PENNSYLVANIA NEWS.

Dr. Warren's agents secured hundreds of samples from liquor dealers last summer, many of which are said by State chemists to be adulterated, but suits were not begun pending a decision in the Crawford County cases. That decision being in favor of the pure food department, many suits will be commenced soon.

S. E. Nicholson, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, has announced the appointment of a Board of Trustees for the campaign to secure a general local option bill in the next Legislature.

A bill will be introduced in the next Legislature providing for a modification of the license law so as to permit the sale of liquors on the Sabbath to hotel patrons.

The Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company is endeavoring to prevent the sale of liquor on its land. A provision in future leases of the company forbids the sale of intoxicants upon the premises leased. Failure to obey the admonition will be followed by ejectment.

The Philadelphia Board of City Trusts has for several years opposed the granting of liquor licenses for places on or near the lands of the Girard estate in Schuylkill County.

The use of fermented wine in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was condemned as "unwise and un-Christian" in the report of the Temperance Committee of the Long Island Baptist Association submitted at the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the association in Brooklyn. The report was submitted by Dr. Cortland Myers and was adopted without discussion. The Temperance Committee also recommended to the association the preaching and practice of total abstinence among their membership and that one day each year be set apart for the signing of the pledge in the Sabbath Schools.

Tobacco is the boy's easiest and most direct road to whisky. When opium is added, the young man's chance of resisting the combined forces and escaping physical, mental and moral harm is slim indeed. There are few, if any, cases in which it is not more or less harmful. Stomach and nerve and will power weakened for life is the common result, even though the habits be finally mastered.—St. Louis Chronicle.

The International Lesson.

FOURTH QUARTER.

LESSON XII.

TWELFTH MONTH 18, 1904.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.—Luke 4: 8.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 12.—Elisha succeeds Elijah. 2 Kings 2: 12-32.
 Third-day, Twelfth mo. 13.—The oil increased. 2 Kings 4: 1-7.
 Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 14.—Elisha and the Shunammite. 2 Kings 4: 25-37.
 Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 15.—Elisha and Naaman. 2 Kings 5: 1-14.
 Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 16.—Joash repairs temple. 2 Kings 12: 4-15.
 Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 17.—Hezekiah. 2 Chron. 29: 18-36.
 First-day, Twelfth mo. 18.—Captivity. 2 Kings 17: 6-18.

Time.—The period covered by the lessons of the quarter is about 128 years (850 B. C. to 722 B. C.).

Place.—The countries where the events recorded took place are the Northern kingdom or kingdom of Israel, and the kingdom of Judah.

Prophets.—Elisha, Amos, Hosea, Isaiah.

Kings.—Over the kingdom of Israel, from the time of the division of the kingdom of Solomon, about 937 B. C., there were nineteen kings; over Judah nineteen kings, and one queen, Athaliah. In Israel there were nine different dynasties; in Judah but one, that of the family of David.

Samaria fell before Assyria in 722 B. C.; Judah lasted until 586 B. C.

The whole history is a sad one; the Israelites had such possibilities before them which they failed to realize. The partial success in the case of David, Solomon, Josiah and Hezekiah only emphasizes the failure of the others. This is pathetically brought out in Isaiah's lament (Isa. 5: 1-7).

One hopeful lesson is taught, particularly in Isaiah, viz., that notwithstanding the sin, the failures and the destruction there was always a residue or remnant which was true to the Lord. Compare I Kings 19: 18; Isa. 28: 5, 6. Again, it is shown that whatever there was true repentance evidenced by a return to righteousness, there was forgiveness and blessing.

In "Elisha succeeds Elijah" we see how God gives to every one a special work, and with the work an endowment for it. No one is required either to do exactly the work of another or to do his own work as another might do it. In "the widow's oil increased," we are taught that God is a very present help in time of trouble to those who call upon Him in sincerity.

In "Elisha and the Shunammite" we see how kindness and care for others are rewarded, and how earnestness and faith bring results.

In "Elisha and Naaman" the lesson is taught that faith and obedience are all essential. It is not the greatness of the deed that counts, but the readiness to do God's will. Little things may seem of trifling importance, but they often lead to great results. In "Elisha at Dothan" is shown how "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them." In "Joash, the boy king" we see how one righteous, earnest and skilful man can change the courses of a whole nation. "Isaiah's message to Judah" is the old, old story, that in order to become righteous, men must cease to do evil; that no sin is so deeply dyed that God will not forgive it, if there be true repentance and determination to follow God's will.

In "The World's Temperance Lesson" there is set forth what seems so hard for men to learn, that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." In "Hezekiah reopens the Temple," we see that true repentance and desire to do God's will is always accompanied by reformation as thorough as possible, and a dedication of self to God. The "captivity of the Ten Tribes" is the sad sequel to a long series of years of sin, of neglect of Jehovah, and of yielding to temptation, and to the seductive worship of idols. The fate of the northern kingdom was the legitimate result of disobedience, and refusal to hear and profit by the messages and warnings of the Lord given through His Prophets. "The wages of sin is death."

In thus concluding this series of Old Testament lessons we should ever bear in mind the fact that these things were written for our instruction, that we through patience and comfort might have hope. The stories are striking, the history is interesting, but they were recorded chiefly to convey spiritual lessons, and above all, that there is a God who loves righteousness and hates iniquity. Who hates sin, but loves the sinner, and longs that he should become pure, and true, and good, and who, moreover, offers him the means of salvation.

Christian Endeavor.

TOPIC FOR TWELFTH MONTH EIGHTEENTH.

WHATEVER HE WOULD LIKE TO HAVE ME DO.

Matt 6: 10; John 15: 10-16.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 12.—His will. John 5: 30.
 Third-day, Twelfth mo. 13.—Obey God. Luke 11: 27, 28.
 Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 14.—Do good to others. Matt. 25: 34-40.
 Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 15.—Overcome the world. 1 John 5: 1-5.
 Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 16.—Win others. Matt. 10: 1-7.
 Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 17.—Be fruitful. John 15: 1-8.

The first fact to fix in our minds, once for all, is that Jesus desires our blessedness. Then we shall determine our conduct not mainly by what He has forbidden, the doing of which we know will bring us sorrow and loss, but we shall look to the positive, constructive side. We shall certainly read the commands, which we feel must be obeyed; but we will read the beatitudes as well to learn what will bring blessing and is therefore the road to the fulfilment of His will concerning us.

The precepts of our Lord cover a wide field, yet we sometimes wish for more specific commandments. But if our desire is like Christ's,—to do always the will of the Father,—we shall be little troubled as to what He might not wish us to do. Activity along known lines of service is a good safeguard against experiments in doubtful fields.

"Whatever" is broad as any life. When Mary told the servants at Cana to do whatever Jesus bade them, she added no qualifications as to reasonableness or convenience. Christ can always be trusted on those points, for obedience to Him is the most reasonable thing in the world, and the results the most conducive to our welfare and happiness.

"Ye are my friends if ye do," not "in part," nor "in general," but "the things which I command you." Exceptions prove human willfulness, and that His will is not accepted as our guide. Saul made the great demonstration of his character when he spared the choice things from the spoils condemned to utter destruction, and thus forming of his life in the mold of self-will, for ends of personal gain, led to its absolute loss.

Bribe-givers and bribe-takers are justly held in dishonor. The "father of his" is the chief offerer of bribes and every man who chooses less than Christ's "whatever" has accepted from the enemy a bribe of bitter fruitage to check the full realization of what our Lord would do for the perfectly obedient. The rich young ruler, Ananias, Simon Magus, ourselves in any day of uncertain devotion, have proved the futility and deadly danger of any consecration that is superficial or half-hearted.

"Whatever He would like" is not an extra credit undertaking. It is no more than a minimum requirement, but its returns are the abundant rewards of His own bestowal.

Missionary Department.

[Communications for this department should be addressed Herman Newman, 1010 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.]

[This week we publish the last of these graphic words from William Wendte, "in the Africa Industrial Mission." In writing to his family, Edgar Hole said in part: "He was always extremely cheerful and pleasant, and scattered sunshine all about. He had an unusual memory and an extraordinary aptitude for picking up the native language. He was a close observer and not only an agreeable but a very instructive companion. After his death I heard some of the natives say among themselves that he was a friend of all of them. His was the first grave dug here, and the first Christian burial. It was a great object lesson to the natives, in contrast with their heathen customs on such occasions."]

"The daily life and the missionary work of Friends here is thus: Workdays we generally arise at about dawn or earlier, between 5.30 and 6 a. m. We usually need lamp-light at first. Breakfast at 6.30, followed by brief devotional exercises at the table. Then one of our boys beats a Uganda drum, a block of wood hollowed into a cylinder and skin stretched over the ends. This is the call to service at our 'meeting house.' All connected with the station attend; indeed, Friends oblige them to, and the total is about fifty natives. This service begins a little after 7 and lasts half an hour. It begins by a hymn from the Kiswahili hymn-book, accompanied by the tune played by Virginia Blackburn on a little portable organ. All are desired to join. Then Arthur Chilson reads and expounds from the Bible in Kiswahili, interpreted into Kavirondo by Ahonga, a professing Christian and Arthur Chilson's body servant. Most of the station natives understand Kiswahili to some extent, but only a few enough to follow a discourse, so interpretation is necessary. After this preaching there is another hymn, then there is praying in Kiswahili, uninterpreted, usually by Edgar Hole and finally all repeat the Lord's Prayer together in Kiswahili.

"Then begins the morning work. Arthur Chilson directs the labor mostly. The largest gang works with him on the dam and sluiceway, now some three-quarters of a mile from Devonshire House down the track to Port Florence. Here there is already a twenty-foot waterfall, and by a dam the fall will be increased to fully thirty feet, giving fifty horse-power for the mill which is to be sent out from America this year. Then they can dress timber and grind grist, not only for the mission, but for customers, if any there be. The sluiceway is being hammered through a stubborn ledge with just crowbars and wedges; Friends are too poor to purchase a blasting outfit. There are twenty-six hired native laborers just now, twenty-three Kavirondo and three Baganda. Baganda are superior workers. Indeed, they are regarded as nearly the most intelligent and progressive of negro peoples. Many of this generation are nominal Christians. Our cook and firewood boy are also Baganda.

"A few of our men are married, but there are no children on the station belonging to any of the men. The children here, some twenty in number, are either the 'boys' of our employes or else the followers of Onduso, the boy chief. There are about thirteen in that gang. They are herded together in one mud and grass house. Onduso, by the way, made a royal progress to Kisumu last week, returning with several screaming articles of raiment—a sweater, in particular, of bloody crimson, emerald green and mustard-yellow stripes. It is a razzler. But he hardly seems more pleased with that than with the elastic bands which I gave him. They are fascinating, he thinks, and he wears them as bracelets. He frequently condescends to visit me in person and a bright guest I find him.

"One of his retinue is my most devoted visitor. His name is Odindu, his skin is of velvety blackness, his age about ten. He wears a rather good, low-cut waistcoat and a saucy fez. At this very instant he is hanging over me, staring at my writing; being so eager to learn himself it delights him to watch me. But his curiosity is exceeded by his politeness. As he hears my door he says, 'Master, may I approach?' and at parting, 'Master, I am going now; farewell.'

"But I was telling thee about the work on the station. At noon the drum beats and the laborers come in to their mid-day food. Those that haven't wives mess with those that have, or they get their own meals. They all have hearty fare, anyway. Their firewood, of course, they are allowed to cut on the station. Friends dine at 12.30. The drum doesn't beat for return to work until two, and all are supposed to have the interval for a respite. At two the dispensary is open. Of course, emergency cases can go there for treatment any time. Doctor and his wife are always in attendance at two o'clock. Sometimes there are outside natives up for treatment, there have often been many in a week, but lately only a few. They are encouraged to bring a small fee, such as eggs or a chicken, but seldom they do, for they find that when properly afflicted they are never refused. Doctor has even done some severe surgery with but slight equipment. At least an anesthetic can be thoroughly administered. The Kavirondo are filthy people, so have filthy diseases. After two o'clock Adelaide Hole holds her school of the women and boys for some two hours, and patient and orderly and eager scholars they are. These native women spend a good part of the day now working in their shambas. Of course, Friends are glad to allow ground to employes for them to cultivate, and the wives hoe away with their back-cracking jembes for themselves, while the husbands wield our perfected shovels for us. Except for the dispensary and school, the afternoon's work is similar to the morning's.

"Drumbeat at six o'clock to call the men home for the day. Our supper at 6.30. Usually a deliberate meal, and a lingering after it to discuss the day's episodes and the morrow's prospects; while thou may be sure we get in a wholesome spell of nonsense, too. Friends are adept in persiflage and our hilarity is often hilarious.

"On First-days there is no work, save the necessary domestic. The order of the day is thus: Friends breakfast at eight. Thus one morning in the week we have the chance to arise by full daylight. We all put on better clothes to impress the natives. There is a piece of steel rail hanging from a tree near the iron house, and after breakfast Edgar Hole whangs this with a sledge hammer to remind the natives that this is First-day and they are expected at meeting. Come to think of it, this is also done at sundown, Seventh-day, to announce the same. Edgar Hole calls this 'ringing the church bell.' It is heard for one or two miles around. At eleven 'the church bell' rings again, and then all assemble about the meeting house, the outside natives stringing in long past the hour—many more men than women. Usually at least one neighboring chief attends, followed by a troop of his people. There have been a few times several hundred of these at one meeting. They squat bunched together in a semicircle outside the mission natives, and are often surprisingly quiet and attentive. The station natives seem to be careful to appear as clean and dressy as they know how at First-day service. The service is very similar to the week day; perhaps one or two more hymns and always a longer preaching. Our dinner is at 12.30. In the afternoon Friends are quiet. Supper at six o'clock.

"Every other week Edgar Hole starts for Kavinis on a Seventh-day morning to spend First-day, returning Second-day noon, preaching to Kavinis people, as thou has already heard. Once or twice a month, on a Seventh-day, either Edgar Hole or Arthur Chilson goes on a steam engine safari to Ogalos, about ten miles from here, over in Marigoli, hustling the people in, preaching to them and returning—all in seven hours. This is the only regular itinerating at present, and thou can see the sacrifice of Friends in doing even this little with the mission. . . .

"The cook house is rebuilt. The stove is thus: A high bench of stones and mud, upon which burns the fire of sticks. The cooking vessels (metal pots, spiders, etc.) are propped up over the fire on stones and bits of iron. That's all. This fire bench is backed by a wall of mud, and over all is the circular grass Kavirondo hut. The smoke wafteth where it listeth. Here seemly food is concocted. But the baking is done in a sheet-iron, home-made oven set in stones in the corner of our lean-to dining-room, and here there is a truly stone chimney.

"Out in Kaimosi Square, opposite, the boys are still squatting around the fires by their bee-hive huts, singing familiar hymns in Kiswahili, 'Nearer, My God, to Thee,' it is, just now; but it is much beyond the hour when missionaries should be asleep. On the other side of me in the awful forest (where he afterwards met his end) an eerie bird-cry reminds me of my lateness, for it is only heard in the dead of night. Heavy rains occur here after twelve or one o'clock almost daily. Sometimes they are thunder-storms, but the lightning very rarely, if ever, strikes near here. Occasionally there is sizable hail, so I have seen natural ice here. Seldom does it rain in morning and it usually is sunny then. It is apt to be more or less cloudy and cool in the afternoons. As for mildew, I am always scraping it off leather stuffs, and even off textiles. Onduso is beside me now struggling meritoriously to write his name with pen and ink. I find him the most gratifying small boy on the station, which is as it should be. A few days ago he told me that he wished to go home to America with me. Then I had to remind him that he was a chief, and that his place was with his people to teach them to be clean and to become Christians. When he first came over here this morning he said, 'Master, I love thee, I am thy child.' This confidence seems more ingenuous from him than from the witch Shimoli, who snuggles up to me and murmurs enchantingly, 'Master, thou art as my father; master, give me a penny.'"

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Ella Naylor expects to join the Houlding Band in China in the near future.

Marion George has removed to Idaho in the hope of recuperating in health.

Elwood Stanley and wife, from Mooresville, Ind., are spending the winter in Whittier, Cal.

Emeline Tuttle and son have now settled in Indianapolis, and are very acceptable with Friends in that city.

Esther Hiatt recently visited the meetings at Ramona and San Diego, Cal. She also visited several families in both places.

Ella C. Veedder, who has been engaged in evangelistic work for several months in Iowa and Wisconsin, has returned to her home in California.

William P. Firth, of Pickering, Ont., who was mentioned in a former item as pastor of the meeting at that place, is a resident minister, but does not serve as pastor.

The mid-year meetings of the Committees and Board of New York Yearly Meeting are being held this week at the Grammac Park Meeting House, New York City.

By appointment of John B. Garrett, a religious meeting was held at Twelfth Street Meeting House on the evening of Fourth-day the 30th ult. It was attended by many Friends.

A very successful Sabbath School "rally" was held at South China, Maine, on the 27th ult. The roll of this school has fifty names in the Home Department and a "cradle roll" of ten.

A union service was held in the Friends' Meeting House, Newberg, Ore., Thanksgiving morning. In the afternoon a reception was tendered to the membership of the meeting by the pastor and his wife, Herbert and Sarah B. Cash.

The Public Park Association of the city of Providence has recently issued a resolution of appreciation of the services of Augustine Jones in behalf of public parks and city improvement. He was for years president of this association.

Edith McGrew spent a little more than three weeks in the North Pacific Sanitorium, Portland, Ore., returning home the 23d ult. Bright hopes are entertained that her health will be very much improved by the treatment there received.

Vassalboro Quarterly Meeting was held at East Vassalboro, Maine, on the 12th and 13th ult. It was a time of deep interest and of real value to many. It was attended by Alfred T. Ware, William Thompson and Timothy B. Hussey, all of whom had valuable service during the sessions.

The W. C. T. U., of which Lydia Cammack is president, recently presented a beautiful bronze drinking fountain to the city of Whittier, Cal. Ex-President M. J. Townsend, Levi Mills and Professor Kelsey, of the college faculty, and others made fitting remarks. The Mayor, Cyrus Trueblood, responded in behalf of the city.

One sentence in the short sketch from the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia was printed incorrectly. It should read: "M. P. Bowles speaks in a recent letter of the dread with which they hear of each battle, knowing only too truly that among the slain will be some one dear to those under their care."

A testimony to the life and services of our late Friend, Richard H. Thomas, was prepared and read at the last sitting of the London Meeting for Sufferings. It dwelt upon his insight into personal spiritual needs and his private ministry to individuals as well as his gift in public ministry. It is to be sent to his home meeting in Baltimore.

In a recent letter from L. Maria Deane, Paonia, Colo., she says: "We have many faithful members and workers, but the work is great in this new field and all the willing workers have their hands full. The Lord is blessing His work here and giving Friends a place of influence among the churches, and in the town and community."

Professor William L. Pearson has been doing some good work this winter, stirring the hearts of Iowa Friends with an address on "Friends Principles Tested by Persecution." He delivered the address first at the celebration of the sixty-sixth anniversary of the establishment of Salem, the first Monthly Meeting in Iowa, Tenth month 18th, but has found occasion to give it before two Quarterly Meetings since.

Albert J. Nathan, an evangelist, held a series of gospel meetings with Friends of First Church, Indianapolis, beginning the 20th ult., and continuing one week. Albert J. Nathan is a convert from Judaism of twenty years' standing, and was a prominent missionary in Morocco, Africa, for eleven years. He preaches a full gospel in a very effective style. Indianapolis Friends have been very much helped by the meetings and good results are sure to follow.

Jonathan Bailey, whose obituary appears in this issue will be remembered by many Friends in Wilmington and California Yearly Meetings. He was instrumental in securing an endowment of $25,000 for Wilmington College, and was a liberal donor to Whittier College. The first religious service held in Whittier was conducted at the "Old Ranch Home" at his invitation. The seventeenth anniversary of this service was celebrated at the new Friends' Meeting House in Whittier last Eighth month.

David E. Sampson conducted a series of meetings at High Point, N. C., the 13th to 27th ult. The interest was good and many were helped into a better life. About thirty-five professed to be converted or reclaimed. About twenty will join Friends. The membership of High Point Meeting is now about two hundred and forty, with additions at almost every Monthly Meeting. Friends there are seeking to carry the Gospel to every part of the city and especially seeking to reach the young men.

Newberg Quarterly Meeting was held in Portland, Ore., the 11-13th ult. It was a time of special interest to all desiring the growth of Friends in the Pacific Northwest. The local meeting of Portland has just built a larger meeting house, very neat and modern, which was ready for use Sixth-day evening. At the evening meeting Amos Kenworthy preached and a number voiced their testimonies. Seventh-day morning, James Price preached on the lessons drawn from the life of Jonah. J. F. Hanson followed, contrasting Jonah's reluctant obedience with Paul's zeal for service. He appealed to all, especially the young, to emulate the spirit of Paul. Dinner was served in the old meeting house and the afternoon session was devoted to business. J. F. Hanson preached a missionary sermon, Seventh-day evening. Aaron Bray made a tender appeal to the young people to consecrate themselves to the Lord's work. Sabbath morning a dedication service for the new meeting house was held. President H. E. McGrew preached the sermon. The entire sum needed to complete the building according to plans was raised.

DIED.

ALLEN.—At Paonia, Cal., Eleventh month 21st, 1904, Alfred A. Allen, in his 45th year. The deceased was an efficient worker in the Sabbath School. He served as a member of the Building Committee for the erection of meeting houses in Boston, Denver and Paonia. He was an elder at the time of his death, and occupied prominent positions of usefulness in the city.

BAILEY.—At the home of his son, James W. Bailey, Whittier, Cal., Ninth month 24th, 1904, Jonathan Bailey, in his 86th year. The deceased was a native of Virginia, lived many years in Ohio and spent his latter days in California. He was a life member of Friends, and was very active in the work of the church.

FLETCHER.—At her home, Richmond, Ind., Eleventh month 13th, 1904, Elizabeth D. Fletcher, widow of Samuel Francis Fletcher, and daughter of Mordecai and Rhoda Hiatt, both deceased, in the 84th year of her age. A life-long Friend, a member of South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting. She served very acceptably upon the committee in charge of Friends Boarding School, before it became Earlham College; was overseer for several years, and occupied the station of elder when a member of White Water Monthly Meeting, serving in the same capacity after Richmond Preparative Meeting was organized as South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting.

Events and Comments.

The Japanese forces around Port Arthur gained an important position last week in the capture of 203-Metre Hill. The fighting on both sides was very severe and the price paid for the position in human blood was appalling. If the position can be held by the Japanese they can shell Port Arthur and the harbor and watch the effects of their shots. This gives them a decided advantage.

While the investigations of trusts conducted by the Department of Commerce are made with the utmost secrecy, it is admitted that the petroleum industry is now the subject of inquiry. California, which is the principal producer of petroleum, is to receive the greater share of their attention, but Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Indiana will also be investigated.

HAPPY CHILDHOOD.

RIGHT FOOD MAKES HAPPY CHILDREN BECAUSE THEY ARE HEALTHY.

Sometimes milk does not agree with children or adults. The same thing is true of other articles of food. What agrees with one sometimes does not agree with others.

But food can be so prepared that it will agree with the weakest stomach. As an illustration—anyone, no matter how weak the stomach, can eat, relish and digest a nice hot cup of Postum coffee with a spoonful or two of Grape-Nuts poured in, and such a combination contains nourishment to carry one a number of hours, for almost every particle of it will be digested and taken up by the system and be made use of.

A lady writes from the land of the Magnolia and the mocking bird way down in Alabama and says: "I was led to drink Postum because coffee gave me sour stomach and made me nervous. Again Postum was recommended by two well-known physicians for my children, and I feel especially grateful for the benefit derived.

"Milk does not agree with either child, so to the eldest, aged four and one half years, I give Postum with plenty of sweet cream. It agrees with her splendidly, regulating her bowels perfectly although she is of a constipated habit.

"For the youngest, aged two and one half years, I use one half Postum and one half skimmed milk. I have not given any medicine since the children began using Postum, and they enjoy every drop of it.

"A neighbor of mine is giving Postum to her baby lately weaned, with splendid results. The little fellow is thriving famously. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum agrees perfectly with children and supplies adults with the hot, invigorating beverage in place of coffee. Literally thousands of Americans have been helped out of stomach and nervous diseases by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee. Look in package for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

that the output of the coinage Mints at Philadelphia, San Francisco and New Orleans during the past fiscal year, was the largest on record. The total domestic coinage amounted in value to $228,202,151, while the number of pieces executed, including the coinage for the Philippines, Venezuela and Costa Rica was 219,353,442.

The convention of the National W. C. T. U., which met in Philadelphia last week, was full of enthusiasm and hope. Much feeling was aroused in behalf of the crusade against Mormonism, the appeal for the fulfilment of treaty promises of prohibition in Indian Territory, and against militarism. Lillian M. N. Stevens, the president, and all of her executive colleagues except two, who declined to serve longer, were re-elected to the offices which they already filled.

The magnificent Exposition, which brought within the gates of St. Louis millions of visitors from throughout the entire world, has run its course, and now passes into history as probably having comprised the most representative collection of the resources, industries, art, peoples and customs of the world ever assembled. The work of preparation occupied a period of seven years. The duration of the Exposition has been seven months, and in that time nothing occurred to dampen the interest. St. Louis has proffered her most generous hospitality to the world, and it has been accepted.

GREATLY IMPROVED SERVICE

TO THE PACIFIC COAST VIA SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Commencing November 27th, the Washington and Southwestern Limited, composed of Pullman Drawing-room Sleeping, Observation-Library, Club and Dining cars, operated daily between New York, Philadelphia and New Orleans, via the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Southern Railway, leaving Philadelphia at 6.50 p. m., in addition, will carry a special Sunset Annex Pullman Drawing-room Sleeping car to connect with the Sunset Express which is operated daily between New Orleans, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The celebrated trans-continental service afforded by these luxurious trains, make a trip to the Pacific Coast not only very quick, but most delightful.

In addition to the above service, the Southern Railway operates tri-weekly, personally conducted Pullman excursion Sleeping cars between Washington, D. C., and San Francisco, Cal., without change, via New Orleans, El Paso and Los Angeles, in which the berth rate is only $8.50 through. Excursion sleepers leave Washington, D. C., at 7.30 p. m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE

Told for Young and Old

By JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

Regular Contributor of Notes on Lessons in "Sunday-School Times," and Author of "Revised Normal Lessons," "Studies in Old Testament History,"

"Studies in the Four Gospels," Etc., Etc.

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presbyt'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine."

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminently a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

By special arrangement we are permitted to offer this book with One Year's Subscription to The American Friend for the Price of the Book Alone, $2.50. (ADD 35 CENTS FOR EXPRESSAGE.)

The Century

There is always one by which the rest are measured.
In the magazine world, that one has always been and is to-day THE CENTURY. Ask writers where their best productions are first offered; ask editors which magazine they would rather conduct; ask public men where articles carry most influence; ask artists where they would prefer to be represented; ask the public what magazine is the first choice among people of real influence, and the answer to each question is the same:
"THE CENTURY." Are you

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

A HOLIDAY BOOK OF PERMANENT VALUE

A Year's Wandering in Bible Lands

By GEORGE AARON BARTON, Ph.D.

Professor of Biblical Literature and Semitic Languages in Bryn Mawr College, and Director of the American School of Oriental Study and Research in Palestine, 1902-1903

THE picture of the Holy Land by Dr. Barton is, first of all, that of a reverent Bible reader, but his exhaustive knowledge of the significant events in ancient history connected with the localities visited, gives his recital a richness and charm entirely beyond the reach of the guide-book tourist. The wonderfully successful set of views which he obtained constitute a complete pictorial record of the scenes connected with Bible history, and together with his text will revivify the characters and scenes of the book as nothing else but a personal visit can. Indeed it may be doubted whether an actual visit to these scenes with Baedeker as a guide is to be preferred to this pictorial visit illuminated by Dr. Barton's insight.

Among the localities visited and pictured by Dr. Barton were Athens, Corinth, the Churches of Asia, Smyrna, Damascus, Baalbec, Jaffa, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Tekoah, Hebron, the Jordan, the Dead Sea, Mizpeh, Bethel, Samaria, Galilee, Beersheba and the South, Luxor, Alexandria, Naples, Pompeii, Rome and many others.

The handsome dress and sumptuous character of the volume make it especially fit for a holiday gift.

12mo, gilt top, 276 pages, with over 140 half-tone plates from views by the author and others, cover illuminated in four colors. Postpaid, cloth, $2.00 net; half morocco, $3.00 net.

CRUTCHES IN RELIGION.

IN THE Church of St. Anne in Quebec, the visitor is shown an enormous stack of crutches. The guide tells him that these crutches were left by poor cripples who have gone home cured by their faith in the relic of St. Anne, so that they are able to live henceforth without such helps for walking.

Far be it from us to speak slightly of the cure of any human ill, if only it is real. But the true monuments to faith are not piles of wooden crutches. There are worse things than feeble knees and twisted spines. We prefer to see the church which has set souls free from props and crutches. We are looking for a religion which carries its curative forces into the entire life of man. The mission of religion is not alone to those who are physically crooked and deformed, but to all beings who have immortal souls within them, and its real victories come when the souls of men are so renewed that they can walk and leap and praise God without the crutches which the easy forms of religion have invented for weak spirits. The church to look for is not the one which has the highest stack of wooden crutches, but the one which succeeds best in helping men live without spiritual crutches.

One of the most dangerous tendencies in present-day religion is the tendency to furnish crutches, to keep Christians hobbling along on outside props, instead of living a strong, virile, inward life of freedom and power. Every religious system which dispenses with personal inward experience, with personal responsibility, with personal dealings with God, is just so far weak and ineffective. The church which undertakes to "do men's religion" for them would produce a group of spiritual dwarfs and cripples, limping through life and shrunk through eternity. Here lies the great danger of transforming religious services into "entertainments"—splendid musical performances and entertaining discourses. They make no demand on the soul for personal consecration. They call for no girding of the loins. They blow no trumpet of advance in your ears. They simply interest and amuse, or help pass away tedious time. They leave you where you were, unable to get on without something outside to entertain you and thrill you and hold you up.

Much of our religious literature is so thin and fiberless that we should be better off if it were sunk in the sea. It arouses no thought, it calls for no mental or spiritual effort. It interests for a passing minute and leaves the reader no inch nearer any true goal of life. A religious paper full of personal puffs, amusing items, storylets, rosewater-scented essays, editorials which say over in an easy way what all the readers have always believed, and notices of popular books—this is a paper to make religious advance well-nigh impossible. There is a strong popular demand for such milk and water, but the true teacher will resist it as he would resist giving matches to a baby. The first duty is to arouse thought, to stir up the mind, to call one's readers to action, to challenge tradition, to stimulate search, to draw upon a person's own power and to force him to consider things for himself. Religious literature has produced an appalling stack of crutches.

Creeds and theological labels, too, have in all ages proved dangerous crutches. They have undoubtedly had their place. They have their place still. There are great fundamental truths of religion which no soul can safely ignore. But few things are more dangerous than pinning on and wearing somebody else's labels, accepting ready-made a religion for which some other soul has battled and suffered and agonized. A change in the religious weather vane may any day blow away your borrowed labels, and leave you, as has happened to so many in our time and earlier, without any religion. No, religion must be rooted and grounded in the primal realities of the soul's life, beyond the deepest "shakings" earth can furnish.

Crutches are necessary in the earlier stages of religious development. We all learn to walk by being helped to walk. But every crutch and every outside help is valuable only so far as it enables us to learn to walk without it. It has a place only so far as it prepares for a state when it can drop off and be stacked up in the relic-room. That religion which makes the crutch indispensable has no permanent place in the life of man. It must decrease, as genuine life increases.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

THE PRESIDENT sent to the two Houses of Congress last week a highly interesting and important document—a message marked throughout by dignity and breadth. A few points in it call for comment here. In the sections devoted to labor and to corporations he is not as definite and explicit as one could wish, but considering the complications and difficulties of present industrial situations, he has perhaps spoken as clearly and bravely as could be expected. He plainly sympathizes with the laborer, and he is an enemy to unlawful trusts and to all combinations of capital which are dangerous to the common welfare of all classes. He outlines, somewhat in detail, a plan for the expansion and betterment of the city of Washington. His words on the suitable housing of the poorer families might be read to profit by the city fathers of all our great cities. He rather goes out of his way to suggest corporal punishment for wife-beaters, who, brutal though they are, perhaps hardly deserve to be pilloried in a President's message more than do many other types of criminals.

He takes a more optimistic view of the condition and progress of our American Indians than some of us are able to do. He thinks that "actual corruption and flagrant dishonesty" are rare on the part of Indian agents, and suggests that in order to make them still less frequent the Indian agents' salaries should be raised.

The message deals wisely with the problems of immigration, which grow more serious year by year. "There is," he says, "no danger of having too many immigrants of the right kind," but he adds, "the citizenship of the country should not be debased." He therefore suggests that our naturalization laws should be thoroughly revised and the method of making citizens out of those who come to us improved.

The part of the message which will most deeply interest our readers is the section which deals with "America's place in world affairs." It contains one of the noblest passages on the world's peace which can be found in any statesman's public documents, and the phrase "peace of justice" is likely to become a watchword of progress. We give a part of the passage as follows:

The steady aim of this nation, as of all enlightened nations, should be to strive to bring ever nearer the day when there shall prevail throughout the world the peace of justice. There are kinds of peace which are highly undesirable, which are in the long run as destructive as any war. Tyrants and oppressors have many times made a wilderness and called it peace. Many times peoples who were slothful or timid or shortsighted, who had been enervated by ease or by luxury, or misled by false teachings, have shrunk in unmanly fashion from doing duty that was stern and that needed self-sacrifice, and have sought to hide from their own minds their shortcomings, their ignoble motives, by calling them love of peace. The peace of tyrannous terror, the peace of craven weakness, the peace of injustice, all these should be shunned as we shun unrighteous war. The goal to set before us as a nation, the goal which should be set before all mankind, is the attainment of the peace of justice, of the peace which comes when each nation is not merely safeguarded in its own rights, but scrupulously recognizes and performs its duty toward others. Generally peace tells for righteousness; but if there is conflict between the two, then our fealty is due first to the cause of righteousness. Unrighteous wars are common, and unrighteous peace is rare; but both should be shunned. The right of freedom and the responsibility for the exercise of that right cannot be divorced. One of our great poets has well and finely said that freedom is not a gift that tarries long in the hands of cowards. Neither does it tarry long in the hands of those too slothful, too dishonest or too unintelligent to exercise it. The eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty must be exercised, sometimes to guard against outside foes, although, of course, far more often to guard against our own selfish or thoughtless shortcomings.

Unfortunately these strong words and the practical sections on "arbitration treaties," and "a second Hague conference," are followed by vigorous recommendations for upbuilding, still farther, the navy. To a peace-loving Quaker it seems inconsistent, but we must not expect too much at once, and we must consider how slowly the great world moves toward the realization of pure ideals. Here is the President's justification of his position:

A self-respecting, just and far-seeing nation should on the one hand endeavor by every means to aid in the development of the various movements which tend to provide substitutes for war, which tend to render nations in their actions toward one another, and indeed toward their own peoples, more responsive to the general sentiment of humane and civilized mankind, and on the other hand that it should keep prepared, while scrupulously avoiding wrongdoing itself, to repel any wrong, and in exceptional cases to take action which in a more advanced stage of international relations would come under the head of the exercise of the international police. A great free people owes it to itself and to all mankind not to sink into helplessness before the powers of evil.

It is cause for regret that the greatest issue now before our people, the traffic in intoxicating liquors, does not loom up large enough to get a place in this message. The trusts are great evils, to be sure, and wife beating is brutal, but alcoholism is a menace to health, prosperity, good morals, happy homes and even to the permanence of popular government.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

WE ARE glad to see a new book by our friend Theodore L. Cuyler, "the last," he says, in a personal letter, "that I shall ever write." He has packed it with practical and spiritual truths for hearts and homes. "Our Christmas Tides" is the title of it. Here are some of the chapters: "My Day at Bethlehem," "Jesus the Joy-bringer," "Back to Christ," "Home-thoughts for Christmastide." It has some good vigorous words against the saloon and in behalf of total abstinence.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE TASK OF JOY.

BY M. CATHARINE ALBRIGHT.

There is no command more difficult to take seriously to heart than the command laid upon us by the Apostle Paul to "Rejoice in the Lord alway." We have from our earliest childhood somehow imbibed the notion that joy is an easy-going thing, closely connected with pleasure and self-indulgence, and that therefore it is almost to our credit to set aside the thought of it or the expectation of it in our own lives.

Yet there is a point of view from which it behooves us to reconsider this attitude of our minds, if we have any conscience about our own efficiency to do the work assigned to us. The fact is that the effect of joy is to stimulate the whole being, to set the pulses beating more strongly, to assist all the secret processes by which our physical life is carried on, to feed the brain and to increase our nervous vitality. Under the impulse of joy deeds can be done and feats accomplished that are ordinarily impossible. And not only so, but the reverse of this is true also. Pain and sadness lower the pulse of life and check the active physical processes, lessening the flow of blood to the different organs. Our very proverbs bear witness to this fact. We say, "His blood ran cold." "She was stunned with grief." "My heart stood still." These are extreme cases, but they indicate the general truth. Joy stimulates and heightens the vital powers; pain paralyzes them.

There is, therefore, an object in joy apart from the satisfaction of the individual who experiences that joy. Joy makes the individual a more powerful instrument. Other things being equal, it therefore behooves him to be joyous. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." And when we come to examine the matter we find that the essence of joy is not self-indulgence, but the exercise of functions and the use of power. What appeals to us so much in looking forward to something that we anticipate will be joyful is the opportunity for self-expression. We long for new openings for the exercise of our powers, both active and passive. And joy is not born of vacancy or unconsciousness, but is fullness of feeling. Supreme joy means supreme effort. A great and unexpected increase of joy, as we well know, leaves us worn out as after long physical fatigue. It is in fact very hard, sometimes, to distinguish between joy and pain. To "rejoice alway" is then not an encouragement or an exhortation to ease, but a call to greater effort.

And surely it must be in the light of this connection between joy and effort that we must interpret those sayings of our Lord when on the night before His betrayal and crucifixion He prayed that His disciples, whom He was about to leave, might have His joy "fulfilled" in themselves, that His joy might remain in them and that their joy might be full. What else could this joy mean but the supremest victory over self, the greatest effort to be made and the highest goal attained? For this "joy before Him He endured the cross and despised the shame." And one who followed closely in His steps speaks of it as his greatest glory that by the strength of Christ within, though sorrowful, he can be "always rejoicing." Such a one has a right then to lay it upon others to carry on the work of joy and to "rejoice in the Lord alway." What does this mean in terms of our daily life?

It is not as we have seen mere light-hearted joy in the good things of life, right and natural and seemly as this may be; it is joy "in the Lord" that is set before us as our goal.

But we say "there is in all our lives so much that is perverse and wrong that it seems as if we should be false to the facts of life if we did not bear witness even in our own persons and expressions to the gloomy side of things." This is our first instinct and the result of natural sympathy. We feel there is no choice for us but to "weep with those who weep." This is no doubt a duty laid upon us, but not necessarily one that clashes with the command we are considering. If we are to be true to our Master's standard to our faith in the Divine ordering of the world, we must look at the facts that seem to us so hopelessly dark and examine them closer and closer, until we see whether they will not reveal in their very essence something behind themselves in which we may legitimately rejoice. Then we may discover that pain and grief and the consciousness of evil presuppose in themselves a standard of good. Woe is seen to be great in proportion as true welfare is departed from. The sign-posts of life point all one way, the only difference between them is the distance they indicate to or from the goal. But even the longest and dreariest road has something to show to the soul that travels that way. To the ordinary observer there may be places where no ray of light pierces the darkness, but the keener the spiritual eye the quicker it is to discern the light even in obscurity, and the more the cry breaks forth, "The Lord is in this place." Once we catch a sight of His power working to subdue all things unto Himself, joy flashes back, however dimly, into our horizon and we are able, even though sorrowful, to be rejoicing. Once we detect the ferment in the unleavened lump or the tiny seed absorbing to itself food and moisture, that it may grow into a mighty tree, our hope comes back and we step on firmer ground.

This "rejoicing in the Lord" then that the Apostle Paul exhorts us to must not be lightly characterized as an easy attainment. It is a hard task, the hardest it may be set before the loyal disciple. He will find himself probably at the outset quite unable to hit the mark, but if he rightly estimates the nature of the "joy set before him," he will run his race with patience and will exercise himself in the running. He will practice himself in this duty of rejoicing. His present powers of joy he will not despise, but consecrate; he will go on rejoicing as he has been in the habit of doing, but he will, moreover, cultivate his present powers by making a point whenever a new set of circumstances arises of looking in them for the controlling and moulding influence of the spirit of the Lord, so that he may learn even in them once more to fulfill the command.

By so doing he will not only be the most efficient instrument in the Divine Hand himself, but he will contribute to the best of his power to the efficiency of others.

It is R. L. Stevenson who cries out:

"If I have faltered more or less,
In my great task of happiness;
If I have walked among my race,
And showed no glorious morning face,
Then, Lord, some pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake."

A gloomy attitude of mind is in his view a half-awake state. If we are able to witness for God by a "glorious morning face, then

"As we meet and touch each day
The many travelers on our way,
Will every such brief contact be A glorious helpful ministry."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"THE CLOSED MEETING-HOUSE."

BY JAMES BEAN.

My attention was lately called to a "closed meeting-house" in New Hampshire, where, fifty years ago, was a little Friends' Meeting. It was an old-fashioned Friends' meeting-house, standing on a hillside, overlooking a beautiful village of three churches, three stores, an academy and hotel, with a population of perhaps four hundred. At one end of the house, and a little in the rear, was a long shed for horses in stormy weather. For furniture within were rows of long seats with raised rails for backs, with a "high seat" and "facing seat" in front. There was an aisle through the middle, on one side of which sat the men and on the other the women. The stove in the center was a potash iron kettle, inverted and set on a circular brick wall high enough for a hearth, to protect the floor, and a sheet-iron door to receive the wood. All was plain wood, without cushion or carpet or paint. There were about a dozen families belonging to the meeting, scattered among the hills, from one to ten or twelve miles apart.

Our home was eight miles from the meeting over a road up and down hill all the way. Twice in the week, winter and summer, the team was harnessed at nine o'clock, and we rode that eight miles to the meeting-house, to meet other teams coming in from other directions, and sit down with from twelve to twenty, an hour or more, on those bare uncushioned seats. There were two ministers (a man and a woman) who, with the elders, occupied the "high seat" as heads of the meeting. One or other of the ministers frequently spoke or offered prayer, and a few words were spoken by others, but there was always a long period of silence and hush of such stillness that the least sound could have been heard before a word was spoken, and sometimes the entire meeting was held in silence. I never heard singing in that house and the sermons were not long, but always in the life, and no sermons ever heard since, however eloquent or learned, have impressed me like some I heard in those meetings, which have influenced all my life, and are as vivid in memory still as when I heard them in my youth. That meeting-house seemed a Bethel to me, and I grew to look forward to meeting-day with as much interest and longing as the hungry boy looks for his noon-day meal. Those ministers and elders and older members, one by one died, and most of the younger members moved away.

I am not familiar with the history of all who remained in the East, but among those who moved West seven became recorded ministers of the Gospel, and with others were instrumental in building up large meetings in four states. One with his wife were many years principals in a Friends' academy and others taught in public schools. One with her companion were superintendents in government schools among the Indians during three presidential terms. Three were Yearly Meeting clerks. The nucleus around which has gathered members of eleven Yearly and two Continental Meetings, and incorporated as "College Park Association of Friends," which has just held its thirty-first semi-annual meeting, in which were present twelve ministers, representing seven religious denominations and two universities, came out of that meeting.

Coming down to the next generation, I recall influential ministers in two Yearly Meetings. The principal of the Friends' School at Providence, the president of Whittier College, the president of the Board of Trustees of Pacific College and the wife of one of the professors in Penn College, are children of parents who grew up in that meeting. One with her husband are principals of a large government school in the Sandwich Islands, exerting an influence upon a generation of children that will be felt in the islands in all the future. One is a bank president and member of the State Legislature. One is teller in another bank, and others have official positions in San Francisco and the State Capital. Others have been presidents of the W. C. T. U. and influential workers in the Y. M. C. A. and other associations of reform in seven western states.

Children of the next generation are now being educated in Whittier College, Stanford University, Pacific College, Penn College, Westtown and other schools, who will perpetuate the principles and teachings which have come down to them through those who grew up and worshipped in that meeting.

A tree may grow old and die, but the life of that tree entered into its fruit, which takes root in other soil, and other trees grow from it. The life of the first kernel of corn lives in the blade upon which is now ripening the "full corn in the ear," to be again planted and each kernel to bring forth its hundred-fold, wherever corn is grown.

The old meeting-house still stands on the hillside overlooking the beautiful village, where it has stood a hundred years, but it is "closed." Many who toiled on rocky farms and worshipped in it, lie in the graveyard across the road, enclosed with a half-buried, moss-covered stone wall and overgrown with grass, but the influence of their lives entered into other lives, and has gone out into the world, permeating many lands and the islands of the sea, and the world is richer and better, and ever will be for the lives, example and influence of those who three generations ago met together and worshipped often in silence in the now "closed meeting-house."

SOME HARD-SHELL ESTIMATES OF PREACHERS.

[A Kansas City minister relates some of his experience among a primitive people with whom he visited in Missouri. They are the hardy descendants of Kentucky mountaineers.—Ed.].

Before retiring to the "loft," where hunters, dogs and cats were supposed to sleep in spite of the rain or snow that blew through the defective "chinking" of the logs, I drew a pocket-Shakespeare from my hunting-coat for a few moments' reading. This proceeding aroused huge interest among the younger generation, and by feigning absorption in the book, I reveled in keen enjoyment of their comments.

"Maw!" whispered one of the small fry excitedly, "what's thet book he's a-readin'?" "It's a Bible, o' course," was the answer; "who ever heard of a preacher readin' anythin' but a Bible?" "But, maw," the youngster persisted, "it don't look like no Bible. It's got a red back to it, an' I peeked over his shoulder an' it ain't got no chapters nor verses like a Bible has." "I'll tell you what it is, child," his mother answered, "it's a preacher's Bible. The preachers are allus a-tellin' us things they say is in the Bible an' thet shorely ain't in the common Bibles we hev, an' it's likely they've got a Bible all o' their own, an' thet book's likely one of 'em." And I, listening, hardly knew whether to laugh or lament at the all-too-keen comment upon those bretheren of the pulpit who sometimes solemnly announce their great discoveries of truths that "shorely ain't in the common Bibles" of their hearers.

The religious phraseology of this particular community is even more odd than the ideas it is intended to express. For instance, everyone is said to belong to one of two classes, that of "brothers" and "sisters," on the one hand, or that of "sinners," on the other. So used, the words denote merely the fact or the absence of church-membership, and the appellation of "sinner" means nothing more derogatory than that the person is not a member of the church. As the head of this household put it on our first acquaintance: "What church do I belong to? Oh, I ain't a brother. My old woman, she's a sister, but as fer me, I'm jest a plain sinner still."

But if the community is thus divided, and if one element may be still uncertain as to whether another's calling and election is "plumb genuine," there is yet one point upon which there is no difference of opinion; namely, the piety and satisfactoriness of

"Brother Dykes," the plain but vigorous Hard-Shell Baptist preacher who holds forth in the little white meeting house on alternate Sabbaths. "Brothers," "sisters," children and dogs, all are equally his friends. As the swarthy old self-acknowledged "sinner" described him: "Thet 'ere Brother Dykes, he is shorely the most joblinous man I ever see!" (It is interesting to note that this strange adjective is extant to-day among the Kentucky mountaineers from whom these people came, and seems rudely to combine the words "jovial" and "strenuous.") "He'll go duck-huntin' with me same's ef I was a brother, an' when there ain't no ducks in sight, he'll set here in the blind an' holler hymn-tunes so's you could hear him a mile. An' he'll argy an' argy with me about quittin' bein' a sinner an' becomin' a brother, jest like he warn't never goin' to give up hope of gittin' me yit. An' mebbe he will, some day — mebbe he will!"

May the good God who loves the plain people, give us more men like Brother Dykes, to labor with the "sinner" in fair weather and foul, in the "meetin' house" and in the duck-blind, till they are won for the Master at last!

USING WEALTH IN WISDOM.

The late James Collanan, of Des Moines, Iowa, whose bequests to nearly one hundred persons and institutions of various kinds amount to about $750,000, was brought up in the neighborhood of Friends and married a "Hicksite" Friend. He very naturally received many impressions of life from such associations, and under these circumstances were easily acquired his frugal habits and honest dealings, as well as the wisdom in business that enabled him to become one of the wealthiest men in Iowa. Likewise the spirit of philanthropy possessed by him and his wife, who lived and labored together unto an octogenarian age, was a distinct Quaker characteristic. They were both deeply interested in woman suffrage, temperance and other reforms, and in various institutions for suffering people. As in the case of many Friends, such forms of benevolence were so much before them that they could hardly see that Christian education, evangelization and mission work are most practical ways of ameliorating the sufferings of mankind and also of avoiding them in great degree. They gave many thousands to the Home for the Aged in Des Moines. While they never united with any Christian church, as was said of him at his funeral, they were both interested in the things in which the churches were interested.

James Collanan had an admiration for honorable men and little use for lazy, base fellows. His sense of righteousness easily rose to indignation against the slothful and criminal. Sometimes fearing advanced education he expressed himself like this, "You educate so many people superficially, who can't make a living and are tempted to fraud and theft, and so many scoundrels whose education helps them in crime." Very little of his great estate was given to colleges. He was drawn to colleges for negroes because of their sufferings. Hence Talladega College, Ala., receives by his will $100,000. His interest in Penn College, which led him to give it by will (and he had previously given above $2,500.) $10,000, was chiefly due to his confidence in its catholic spirit and thorough instruction, as also to his liking for the simple, honest life of the Friends. In one of his many conversations with the writer he inquired particularly whether the Friends continued to believe in the leading of the Spirit in their worship. To him the sincerity and truth which usually attend such views were as agreeable as sham cant and sophistry were displeasing to him.

James Collanan loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and he resolved that his wealth should serve only that which commended itself to him. This is very marked in one article of his will, which is worthy of special notice. He says: "I bequeath to the Home for the Aged in Des Moines, the sum of $20,000. This is given on the express condition that the officers of the home keep in force a rule not to admit any person to the benefit of the home who for ten years prior to the time of application for admission is in the habit of habitually using morphine or any other drugs, or drinking habitually intoxicating liquors. My idea is that if a person will spend his money in the use of such useless and filthy habits so that he has not enough left to support him in old age, he must suffer the consequences. I do not intend my money shall be used to support such persons."

This decision was not from want of sympathy with even wasteful and worthless people who come to suffer. Probably few would have sooner helped a suffering drunkard than James Collanan. But he would not encourage their drunkenness by making permanent provision for them in old age. On the other hand, in providing largely for poor women he had the wives of drunkards in special remembrance. Indeed, his sympathy extended to the brute creation. This found beautiful illustration in the purchase of nuts and seeds for the squirrels and birds which stayed during winter in the woodlands near his home.

RICHARD H. THOMAS.

[A Minute from the Meeting for Sufferings, London, England. Held Eleventh Month 4th, 1904.]

The death of our dearly loved friend, Dr. Richard H. Thomas, of Baltimore, which occurred on the third of Tenth Month, has brought us into close sympathy with his family, and has raised afresh in our minds the remembrance of his loving spirit and his devoted service for his Lord, a service which he carried out during long periods of labor in this country, as well as on the continent of Europe, and in his own land. With a well-informed mind and considerable power of thought, he combined a most sympathetic nature and a remarkable clearness of spiritual vision. By the faithful use of these gifts, even when weak in body, he was able not only to help many Friends, younger and older, to clearer visions of Divine truth, but also to stir up in their hearts that active response to the love of God, which transforms life from a wearying drudgery or a selfish frivolity into a joyous and fruitful service for others. Specially noteworthy was his diligence in making use of opportunities for helpful intercourse. In his vocal ministry, whether in meetings for worship or in special gatherings of a public character, he seemed hardly to think of self, but brought his whole being into his message; and in private converse with those who sought his advice, it was at once apparent that he was able to understand their difficulties and their needs, and to bring his best powers to meet them.

His influence in this country was a very extended one, and the times, longer or shorter, spent in his company will be for all time fragrant in the memory of very many of us.

While rejoicing in the thought that for him faith has vanished into sight, and that he is now in the presence of the Lord he loves, we share with his dear wife, Anna B. Thomas, and her daughter, and with her father, Joseph Bevan Braithwaite, and the other members of their family, a sense of the great loss they have sustained; and we commend them to the abounding love of the God of all comfort.

WISDOM IN EVANGELISTIC WORK.

BY EZRA LAMBORN.

In prying into the "heights and depths," searching the sea, and in the "bowels of the earth" for wisdom, Job found it not in any of these; but he arrives at the same conclusion as that of James, who says: "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," James 1: 5. A consciousness of the lack is the first thing. We are not apt to ask for what we have, or believe we have. In our lives we all encounter perplexing problems, not only in relation to temporal things, but as regards our duty as Christians, and to one another. Matters crowd in upon us "pro and con," and our better judgment may not have full sway. The pressure of circumstances and conditions that are brought to bear may warp our judgments, and our movements may not always be wise. When conflicting issues and duties are beyond our finite wisdom to adjust, we can do no better than obey the admonition of the text, and receive the full benefit of the promise.

There are two kinds of wisdom,—that of the world, which is misleading, and that of God, which is divine, and safe to follow. The wisdom of the world teaches how we may move along with the greatest ease, and in such a way as not to conflict with things that be. It recommends silence along reform lines, and that we "follow the crowd," or glide along smoothly with the current. The apostles and great reformers, who we believe were guided by Divine wisdom, found peace, and with it persecution, in the preaching of principles and reformations that were not popular in their day. Paul reversed his life, and went counter-current with the times, in his zeal for his Master, and under a sense of his obligations to God. We are enjoying liberty of conscience and blessing to-day as a result of the sufferings into which wisdom led our forefathers. Do we find as we seek and pray for Divine wisdom that it sometimes leads us into hard places? Are we willing to row against the tide, if wisdom so directs?

We can but observe the growth of the church under persecution, when "church extension work" seemed to prosper in proportion to the amount of suffering. As the faithful "missionaries" labored under great difficulties "among the masses," as the spirit of God worked upon their hearts, many were "added to the church." At that time the church was much concerned for the spread of the gospel, and many Friends were led to fields of labor outside the church. Practically it was an effectual evangelistic movement. As the truth was preached in power, the people flocked to hear, were "convinced," or "converted," and joined Friends.

Such was the travail of the church in those days that a "Meeting for Sufferings" was instituted for the purpose of assisting and encouraging those whose concerns led them into suffering, and providing means for their labors,—a real "missionary society." They truly all suffered together for Christ's sake. Such active workers, and such an active sacrificing missionary organization will surely accomplish much.

We have no cause for despair at the present time. The number of new meetings established in America in the last few years indicates that the church has not been asleep. The outlook is bright and encouraging.

We derive a lesson from the prison and jail missionary, who labors with the criminal behind the bars. He leads many to accept the Saviour, not by arraigning them for their black deeds, but by kind, persuasive words. In many institutions of this kind, the sympathetic, tender-hearted minister of Christ is a welcome guest. Kindness is always a virtue. Severe measures harden the criminal, but do not bring him to Christ. Is not the plain truth, kindly spoken, also more effective with the sinner who may enter the doors of the revival, than stern rebuke? All will admit that refinement and gentleness are the effect of the spirit upon the heart, and that it tones down the nature that abounds in uncharitable criticism and denunciation. Kindness is one of the Christian graces, and is an important factor in winning souls to Christ. Notice that James says: "God giveth liberally and upbraideth not."

LESSON XIII.

TWELFTH MONTH 25, 1904.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

Isaiah 9: 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Isa. 9: 6.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 19.—The Prince of Peace. Isa. 9: 1-7.

Third-day, Twelfth mo. 20.—The angel's song. Luke 2: 1-16.

Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 21.—Simeon's joy. Luke 2: 25-35.

Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 22.—Worship of the Magi. Matt. 2: 1-11.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 23.—Flight to Egypt. Matt. 2: 12-21.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 24.—The Word. John 1: 1-14.

First-day, Twelfth mo. 25.—Saviour of the world. 1 Jas. 4: 1-14.

Time.—The exact time cannot be determined, but it was probably during the reign of Ahaz, king of Judah, who reigned B. C. 735-726.

Place.—Spoken at Jerusalem.

It is not unlikely that Isaiah 7-12 are a continuous prophecy. Ahaz was one of the wicked kings of Judah; he introduced the worst features of Baal worship; he made images in honor of the god; he seized the sacred vessels of the temple, gave the vessels to the king of Assyria as a bribe, shut up the temple and sacrificed his children by fire to Moloch. The result was the devastation of the country by the Assyrians, and moral and religious darkness. In vain did Isaiah warn him, and urge him to rely upon Jehovah. The lesson begins at this point. Note particularly the Revised Version, which makes the passage much clearer.

1. "But there shall be no gloom to her that was in anguish. In the former time he brought into contempt," etc. R. V. "Zebulon," "Naphtali." Upper and Lower Galilee. "But in the latter time hath he made it glorious," etc. R. V. The idea is that though the land had been brought into contempt, in the latter time it would be made glorious. The prophet sees the future desolation, but also the future restoration and glory. "Beyond Jordan." East of the Jordan. "Galilee of the nations." It is not clear what this term really means. Some think that it is the part of Galilee along the northern border, and hence most liable to attack from the Gentiles.

2. The prophet still sees as in a vision the future, and speaks as if it were a past experience. The people are his own countrymen. The darkness was both moral and national. "Shadow of death." Death is felt before it comes. "Light." The promise of better days and of a deliverer.

3. "Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased their joy." R. V. A continuation of the prophecy as seen in the vision.

4. "Broken the yoke of his burden." Primarily of the Assyrians, and metaphorically, perhaps, of sin. "As in the day of Midian." Referring to the great victory of Gideon. Judg. 7: 1-23.

5. "For all the armor of the armed man in the tumult and the garments rolled in blood, shall even be for burning and for fuel of fire." R. V. There are few verses in the Bible which are more improved by the Revised Version than this one. The old version was not clear and was hard to explain, but in the Revised the sense is clear and the idea is consistently carried on. The meaning is, that all the warlike weapons and military uniform shall be destroyed by fire and peace shall reign. Compare Isa. 11: 1-10.

6. "For unto us a child is born," etc. Whether Isaiah himself applied to these and the following beautiful words the fullness of meaning that modern theologians and others have given is very doubtful. He probably applied them in the first place to an earthly king, and then gave them a moral meaning and eternal significance expressive of the Messianic hope among his people, and of which his own heart was doubtless full. "Government shall be upon his shoulder." He shall be the ruler. "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." R. V. Some of the best scholars read "Wonderful-Counsellor, God-hero, Father-Everlasting, Prince-of-Peace," and this is doubtless the most literal rendering. How applicable these words are to Christ is seen at a glance. The first quality of the Messiah was wisdom, "wisdom and understanding" (Isa. 11: 12); the next is power; the next fatherliness of character; finally he is to be the herald of peace. Compare Micah 5: 5; Zech. 9: 10.

7. The government will continue to increase and to spread forever. "The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall perform this." "Whatever man's sin and darkness be, the Almighty lives and His zeal is infinite." "Zeal," literally, means warmth, glow, hence earnestness.

TOPIC FOR TWELFTH MONTH TWENTY-FIFTH.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

Isa. 9: 2-7.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 19.—A dark world. Isa. 42: 6-9.

Third-day, Twelfth mo. 20.—A star shines. Num. 24: 15-17.

Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 21.—A sun arises. Mal. 4: 1-6.

Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 22.—Dawn breaks. Luke 2: 27-32.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 23.—Light rejected. John 8: 16-21.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 24.—Sons of light. John 12: 34-36.

The light is often better appreciated in its absence than in its presence. We are so used to the conditions and forms and privileges that have come to us through the centuries of Christian inheritance that, with all that we see and know of dark places in our land, we can hardly realize the darkness of those lands on which the daystar has not risen.

It is not merely a light of knowledge that Christ has given us. Doubtless the first benefit that many would name as springing from the dawning of the day is that we are thus enabled to see, to move about and engage freely and successfully in our work. Yet thousands of people are busily and productively employed with never a glimpse of the sun's light upon their labors. It is as the bringer of life that light stands out as the beneficent gift of God. The chill and darkness of the cavern develop no life of either plant or animal that can compare with that fullness and exuberance of life which the sun's rays stimulate.

The wonderful discoveries of Finsen and others have given new meaning to that beautiful figure—the Sun of Righteousness with Healing in His Wings. The dreaded lupus is banished by the proper exposure to certain rays of light, and the virulence of small-pox is largely controlled by the exclusion of the irritating rays and the admission of only the soothing ones to the patient's room.

He who is our light is our life. The morals of a race depend not so much on its abstract philosophy as on its impelling motives. Christ is the light that not only makes the way clear before us, but He stirs the pulse of life and quickens the conscience so as to make operative that which we know.

The darkness of the law has given way to the light of grace. The darkness of the middle ages broke when Luther came forward with the words: "The just shall live by faith." The night of religious persecution, of burning witches, of church defense of slavery, is gone. But our day is not yet the perfect one that Christ would make it, if men would drive out the awful shadows of intemperance, of race and class hatred, of war, of injustice to the weak and unfor-giveness for the erring.

Has the Church yet tried how much she could do? He who said, "I am the light," said also "Ye are the light," and the work that He began is for us to carry on with joy and gladness that in His light we see light.

FRIEND' MISSION, KOTZEBUE, ALASKA,

Ninth month 24th, 1904.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Our last summer mail is due to leave within a few days, and the date set is none too early, for our school boys are already using their skates upon the ice-covered lakes about the mission, the more turbulent waters of the ocean are yet unshackled by the "ice king," but their days of freedom are about ended for this season.

All are busy preparing for the long winter, which is now so near at hand. A new school-house almost enclosed gives employment to half a score, and all the others, men, women and children, are busy at work upon their winter homes. These consist of a framework of wood, shaped very much like a "bee hive," half underground and covered by two or three feet of peat or sundra. A long low narrow entrance way is provided, with two or three doors. The last one is possibly two feet and a half in height. This is the nature of the house in which our people must dwell for the next eight months. In its one room, perhaps, twelve feet square, a half score of people will pass the long dreary winter.

Our summer visitors have all left us, and many of them are now hundreds of miles away upon the headwaters of some river where they will hunt and trap, for their food and the furs for their clothing; most of those who visited here during the past few months left us Christians—"Jesus men," as they call themselves. I do not know of half a score that have left us unconverted. At the last Sabbath service, when most of them were present, above eighty came to know our Jesus as their personal Saviour. Bless His dear name forever. Our membership is growing quite large; at this date we have more than eight hundred good standing names upon our mission church book, and very few prove false to the vows they take. Death perhaps removing more names from our book than sinful acts. One of our brightest girls died a few days ago at a point one hundred miles distant, her last request was that she might be buried with her face looking toward the mission.

Our next mail after this will go by dog or reindeer team, so that it will be some months ere our friends will hear from us again.

Faithfully His and thy friends,

DANA AND OTHA THOMAS.

It does not take a great man to be a Christian, but it takes all there is of him.—S. S. Evangel.

"GOD NEVER CLOSED HIS WEEK ON WEDNESDAY EVE."

[This title is an unfinished poem by my dear friend, the late Dr. R. H. Thomas. The following interpretation is suggested in loving appreciation of his memory.—Robert B. Warder, Holmesburg, Philadelphia, Pa., Twelfth month 4th, 1904.]

I. CREATION.

God said, when earth was waste and void, "Light be.
Let sky divide the waters from the sea.
Let ocean shore appear and fields be green.
Let sun and moon add beauty to the scene."
The mists dispelled, the earth with glory crowned,
'Twas day the fourth, God naught but goodness found.
'Twas fair, 'twas wonderful, without a blot;
But fish and bird and beast and man were not.
Completeness is God's thought, we do believe,
He never closed His week on Wednesday eve.

II. ABRAHAM'S FAITH.

Three days they went, to reach Moriah's land.
A victim to be offered, God had planned.
"Behold the fire and wood, where is the lamb?"
So Isaac asked. Could Abraham be calm?
"God will provide," thought heart and flesh must bleed.
The world must yet be blessed through Isaac's seed.
The wood was laid, the knife was drawn from sheath;
But resurrection power was claimed by faith.
Jehovah Jireh gave a ram instead;
The two returned, as Abraham had said.
Thus he who faithful was had faith made strong,
And God's perfection was his even-song.

III. CHRIST'S MINISTRY.

One day (or year) Judea heard her King.
The next, did Galilee His praises ring.
The third, expelled, he traveled north and east;
Yet faced his goal, the cross, at time of feast.
In darkness was atonement now complete,
The temple sacrifice no longer meet.
Man's hope was dead, the promise none believe.
Had God, then, closed his week on Wednesday eve?
Disciples joyed to see their risen Lord.
Throughout the world he sent His precious word.
Cornelius proved God's universal love.
No Jew nor Greek, no black nor white above.

IV. THE PERSONAL MESSAGE.

Has sorrow come? Is heart's desire refused?
In pain and bitterness is God accused?
Does Wednesday eve find all thy plans disturbed,
And righteous zeal by heavenly mandate curbed?
"Be still and know that I am God," saith He,
"For changeless love nath shapen my decree."
God's blessing comes in harvest and in storm.
Job felt all Satan's darts that sought his harm,
While God but willed a blessing for his child;
Wisdom and trust, where human pride defiled.
Jesus began the work He doth renew;
He labors long to strengthen me and you.
Let patience have her perfect work, be sure
What God hath wrought forever shall endure.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Ida Roberts, of Westfield, Ind., has gone to Mexico to assist in the Friends' mission work there.

At the Monthly Meeting held at Monkton Ridge, Vt., the 30th of last month, five persons requested membership.

A public meeting of Friends' Historical Society of Philadelphia will be held on Third-day, the 13th of Twelfth month, at 8 o'clock p. m., at Friends' Select School, 140 N. Sixteenth Street.

Joseph Glaister, an English Friend, made two very acceptable visits at Guilford College recently, having service in meetings for worship and addressing the students on some questions of the day.

We deeply regret to record the death of Henry Ernest Grace, of Bristol, England, at the early age of thirty-four. He was a very promising young Friend, from whose mature years much was expected.

S. A. Wood, after attending his mother's birthday party on Thanksgiving Day, at Tecumseh, Mich., left for Traverse City, Mich., to engage in evangelistic services there and elsewhere in the limits of that Quarterly Meeting.

About eight members of the Friends' Church of Gibara, Cuba, are making a special study of the Book of Acts, reading one chapter a day. The mid-week prayer-meeting is devoted to further study and explanations by Sylvester Jones, the pastor.

At the Union Service of the East Lynn (Mass.) churches, Thanksgiving Day, held at the Essex Street Baptist Church, Mary E. Miars preached the sermon from the text Isa. 6: 3, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory."

The Endeavorers of the Friends' Church in Gibara, Cuba, observed Thanksgiving in a very practical manner by bringing to the church thank-offerings of vegetables, groceries, flowers and money, which, after holding a praise service, they distributed to the poor and sick.

Leanah Hobson has accepted pastoral work at La Porte, Ind., for this year, and will not be in the evangelistic work. The Friends there have a good meeting-house, well located in the city. It was dedicated about one year ago. The outlook is encouraging for Friends. Leanah Hobson's address will be La Porte, Ind.

Westfield Quarterly Meeting in the limits of Western Yearly Meeting was held on the 2d, 3d and 4th inst. The sessions were all well attended, and were times of special blessing. Gurney H. Dicks, of Fairmount, Ind., and Jesse Johnson, of Winchester, were very acceptably in attendance and rendered valuable service.

Friends of New York Yearly Meeting held a series of special meetings in New York City, the 5th to 7th inst. These meetings comprised a number of Yearly Meeting committee and board meetings, conferences and lectures. George A. Barton was present and gave two addresses on "The Christian Doctrine of God and its Unfolding in the Scriptures."

A few people in Cline Falls, a new town situated in Crook County, Ore., on the north end of the Columbia Southern Irrigation Company's land, organized a Sabbath-school and held the first meeting for worship the 27th ult. They intend to continue these services each Sabbath. Any Friends desiring to locate in that section of the country will find it a very good place to get a cheap home. Anyone desiring information should address F. M. George, Cline Falls, Ore.

A company of fifty persons assembled at the home of Vincent Wood, Tecumseh, Mich., on Thanksgiving Day. The occasion was the 91st birthday of Angelina Wood. Her four children now living and their companions were present, also the widow and three sons of E. G. Wood, deceased, and the oldest son and family of J. D. Wood, deceased. There were sixteen grandchildren, with the companions of five, and nine great-grandchildren, a brother and wife, cousins and a niece.

The Friends' Missionary Advocate for Twelfth month contains a "History of Friends' Work in China," by George F. De Vol. In this interesting sketch the author, who has recently returned from the field, gives an outline of the work from its inception by the call of Esther H. Butler in 1887 until the present time. Any Friend, not already supplied with this number of the Friends' Missionary Advocate can secure one free by applying to Eliza C. Armstrong, Plainfield, Ind.

Emily W. Kemp, whose obituary appears in this issue, was born in Clark County, Ohio, and moved with her parents, Solomon and Amy Allen, to Parke County, Ind., in 1826, where they settled in the woods in a log cabin surrounded by wild Indians, wild animals and wild turkeys. Thither also came Silas H. Woodard with his parents in 1828. A happy union followed, and together they labored to subdue the new country and advance the cause of Friends until his death. Later she united in marriage with Jesse Kemp, whom she survived nineteen years.

The Christian Endeavor of Poplar Ridge, N. Y., has recently added to its list of standing committees one to be known as the Evangelistic Committee of Christian Endeavor. A Beckwith folding organ has been purchased, and the committee, in connection with the pastor and wife, purpose to carry on a cottage meeting evangelistic campaign during the winter months. This is an extensive field, and it is believed that the Gospel may be carried into many of the remote and isolated homes in this way. The aged and infirm who are shut in during the winter may also have religious services brought to them.

Sterling Quarterly Meeting was held at Sterling, Kan., the 26th ult. But one minister from outside the Quarterly Meeting was in attendance, yet it was a season of much spiritual blessing. This young woman, Susie E. Allen, field evangelist for Christian Endeavor by appointment of the Yearly Meeting, seems to be the right person for the place. Ira S. Bundy, who has so acceptably served the meeting at Sterling as pastor for a number of years, has consented to continue another year. It is truly wonderful how a devoted, energetic child of God will continue to grow and expand even unto old age.

We have received a twenty-page pamphlet containing the proceedings of the sixty-sixth anniversary of the organization of Friends' Church in Iowa, held at Salem, Iowa, Tenth month 8th, 1904, which gives a résumé of the proceedings: "A Brief History of Iowa Friends," by Isaac T. Gibson; "Educational Work of Friends," by President A. Rosenberger, of Penn College; "Principles of Friends Tested by Persecution," by William L. Pearson, of Penn College; "A Synopsis of Early Reminiscences," by Henry W. Joy (deceased), and some letters of greeting. A few copies are for sale at 10 cents each or two for 15 cents, including postage. Address, Isaac T. Gibson, Salem, Iowa.

Meetings were held from the 13th to 20th ult. at the "Old Brick," on North Street, Poplar Ridge, N. Y., where services have been laid down for several years. Considerable interest was manifested, and one person accepted Christ. The principle attendance was from Barber's Corners, a community one and one-half miles north of the meeting-house, where a meeting is held every Sabbath p. m. in a school-house. Meetings were also held at "The Union Chapel," two miles west of Poplar Ridge, beginning the 27th ult. and continuing one week. This work has lately been surrendered by the Methodists to Friends. A very interesting cottage meeting is held weekly in this neighborhood. On the 10th inst. special meetings began at Poplar Ridge, in which Emilie U. Burgess, of Highland, Ulster Co., assists.

The many friends of the venerable Amos Stuart, now in his 97th year, will regret to hear that he is very feeble and suffering from an attack of bronchitis, which is a severe trial to him in his weakened condition; he is carefully attended by his children, all his sons and daughters having visited him during the past few months, as well as his grandchildren, including Addison Stuart and family, of Kent, Wash.; Elbridge Stuart and family, of Seattle, Wash.; Frank Stuart, of El Paso, Texas; Harry Stuart, of Portland, Ore.; Dr. J. H. Stuart, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Sidney Stuart, of Anderson, Ind.; beside his daughters who are near at hand, wife of R. E. Woods, of Knightstown, Ind.; wife of W. P. Bundy, of Dunreith, Ind.; wife of E. Y. Teas, of Centreville, and wife of E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind. It is seldom that the privilege is given so large a family of children in middle and later life to gather about a parent so venerable and so affectionately respected.

Deep River Quarterly Meeting, held the 3d inst., at Deep River, N. C., was lightly attended, owing to inclement weather and bad roads. The business meeting was short. The presence and active interest of Elihu E. Mendenhall, a venerable and weighty member of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, now in his 88th year, was an interesting feature. F. S. Blair was present and spoke on peace and arbitration. The meetings for worship were seasons of blessing. Sophronia Elliott Reynolds, a native of North Carolina, but for more than twenty years a resident of New York State, and a member of that Yearly Meeting, was present with credentials as a Christian worker. She had excellent service. Thomas E. Anderson also spoke to the edification of all. The Bible School on First-day was conducted by Jabez R. Mendenhall, Yearly Meeting superintendent of Bible School work. This Bible School is under the superintendency of Joseph Potts, who was formerly a Philadelphia Friend, but is now the local minister in Deep River Meeting.

The Friends of Alva, O. T., laid the corner-stone of their meeting-house on the 2d of last month. Alvin Coppock, superintendent of evangelistic work of Stella Quarterly Meeting, and his wife Laura, also a minister, took charge of the services. Three families of young Friends from Carmel, Ind., who came west to locate, arrived just in time to witness the exercises. Several persons from other denominations were present. A tin box enclosing a revised Bible, the uniform Discipline, copies of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, The Soul Winner, Friends' Missionary Advocate and The Youths' Friend; catalogues of Friends' University and Stella Friends' Academy; names of members of the Alva Meeting and Bible School, and a photograph of two Friends wearing the time-honored silk bonnets was placed in the stone. The building is 28 by 40 feet, with a small extension in the rear. It is located in a very needy section of the city, with no other church near. The Friends are very hopeful of completing the building without debt, but they need help from outsiders. They look to God to move those who should give for this work. The well-to-do members are faithfully doing their part, since they have to provide clothing for many who attend the meeting and Bible School ere they can appear. The meeting has no pastor, and many express their pleasure at the liberty in the meeting.

MARRIED.

WHITE-BALDWIN.—At the home of the bride's parents, on Twelfth month 7th, 1904, Arry G. Baldwin, of Noblesville, Ind., and Gail White, of Westfield, Ind.

DIED.

HANSON.—At her home in Westfield, Ind., Eleventh month 29th, 1904, Elizabeth, wife of Milton Hanson and daughter of Jesse and Phebe Mendenhall, in her 51st year. She was a devoted Christian, and an earnest worker in the church and will be greatly missed.

KEMP.—At the home of her youngest son, Parke Co., Ind., Eleventh month 11th, 1904, Emily Woodard Kemp, daughter of Solomon and Amy Allen, in her 86th year. The deceased was an early emigrant to Indiana, and did much to establish the Friends' Church there. Her long life was well spent in the Master's service.

KELTNER.—At Anderson, Ind., Eleventh month 18th, 1904, Hester M., wife of J. C. Keltner, in her 65th year. Her life was one of loving and faithful devotion in the home. She and her husband were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years. They transferred their membership to Friends some three years ago.

MORRIS.—At his home near Mt. Gilead, Ohio, Eleventh month 16th, 1904, Joseph Morris, son of Abraham and Mary Morris, in his 85th year. The deceased was a strong Christian character and an advocate of the principles of early Friends.

IMMORTAL LIFE.

It seemeth such a little way to me
 Across to that strange country—the Beyond;
 And yet not strange, for it has grown to be
 The home of those of whom I am so fond:
 They make it seem familiar and most
 dear,
 As journeying friends bring distant regions near.

So close it lies, that when my sight is clear
 I think I almost see the gleaming strand;
 I know I feel those who have gone from here
 Come near enough sometimes to touch my hand.

I often think, but for our veiled eyes,
 We should find heaven right round about us lies.

I cannot make it seem a day to dread,
 When from this dear world I shall journey out
 To that dear country of the dead,
 And join the lost ones so long dreamed about.

I love this world, yet shall I love to go
 And meet the friends who wait for me,
 I know

I never stand above a bier and see
 The seal of death on some well-loved face,
 But that I think—one more to welcome me
 When I shall cross the intervening space Between this land and that one over there;
 One more to make the strange Beyond seem fair.

And so for me there nothing is in death,
 And so the grave has lost its victory:
 It is but crossing with abated breath
 And white-set face, a little strip of sea,
 To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
 More beautiful, more precious than before.

Flour, Butter and Eggs

Do not be deluded by the deceptive claim of economy for the cheap baking powders. Instead of saving, their use results in a wastefulness of the most serious kind.

First, there is the loss of an occasional baking. Flour, butter and eggs cost too much to risk spoiling them with an inferior baking powder. Royal's work is uniformly perfect, and materials are never wasted where it is used.

In the second place, the adulterants which are used to cheapen the cost of many baking powders have a harmful effect upon the health. No prudent person will risk an attack of indigestion to save a few cents on baking powder. Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure and wholesome, actually adding anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food.

Thus the use of the Royal is doubly economical.

Events and Comments.

J. E. Rankin, the author of "God be with you till we meet again," died recently.

The Carnegie Peace Palace at The Hague will cost, it is estimated, $1,640,000, and will follow the plan of the Brussels Palace of Justice.

The fatal power of imagination was illustrated recently by the case of a Russian railway employee who was by accident shut up in a refrigerator car. He wrote on the wall: "I am becoming colder." "I am slowly freezing." "I am half asleep; these may be my last words." And when they took him out dead, the temperature of the car was only 56; the apparatus being out of order.

The interiors of railroad coaches have been growing in simplicity of treatment for years, but it has taken long to reach the good sense shown in one passenger coach on the Boston and Maine road. The arched roof ceiling has been painted white, and the reflection from this is so much greater than before that the illumination in the car from its lights seems to be fully doubled.

The wife of Charles Stillwell Eldredge, of Radnor, Pa., has just presented to the geological department of Bryn Mawr College, Pa., the very valuable mineralogical collection brought together by her father, the late Theodore D. Rand. The collection, which numbers from 20,000 to 30,000 specimens is unusually complete and includes hundreds of rare minerals, seldom seen in college laboratories. It was secured by a lifetime of personal collection, by purchase and by exchange with collectors of all countries.

It appears from the annual report of the American Federation of Labor for the year closing Ninth month 30th, that the Federation called 1,806 strikes, involving 256,838 employees. Of these strikes 1,193 were won, 233 compromised, 194 lost and 178 are pending. It is reckoned that 121,340 employees were benefited by the strikes and 39,839 were worsted. The cost of the strikes (to the union members) is estimated at $2,864,642.13. The Federation gained 253,485 in membership during the year. It seems, however, that there has been a falling off in the general trade-union membership throughout the country.

The supposed decline in the physique of the English people is leading to reform movements, the latest of which is a plan for a central school under the auspices of the national league for physical education and improvement. The idea is to introduce the methods of the royal central institute of Sweden, and train physical instructors for the country. If it goes to the bottom of things in its effort to improve the physical condition of England, it will find itself unable to ignore burning social questions, such as the amelioration of poverty, the drink evil, unsanitary tenements, the land monopoly, which drives so large a proportion of the population into the towns, etc. It is not the well-to-do who stand in need of physical betterment.

The Hepburn-Dolliver Bill is liable to come up for action in the early days of Congress. This bill is designed to permit interstate shipments of liquor to be subjected to the operation of state laws upon entering the state and before delivery to the consignee, as at present. The passage of this bill is of the utmost importance, and to this end the active co-operation of every friend of temperance in every state is solicited. Each is urged to write immediately a strong, courteous letter to his member of the House of Representatives at Washington, urging his active support of the Hepburn Bill; also, to enlist the interest of influential friends in his city and neighborhood, and have a great number of them write their congressmen at once, urging their hearty support.

It is reported that Newell Dwight Hillis, in company with W. J. Dawson, of London, England, is planning an evangelical campaign the object of which, if realized, will recall the days of Moody and Sankey, and cause a repetition of the same kind of religious enthusiasm. Thirty-three hundred converts made in twenty-four days in Bolton, England, is only the beginning of this movement. Binghamton, N. Y., last week closed all its business houses and spent one day in prayer. In commenting on this movement, the Chicago Chronicle in a recent editorial says: "Many will think in these days of rationalism and scientific skepticism there is little ground for religious enthusiasm, but stranger things than this have happened. It would not be strange if there were a great revival of religion—a sudden and tremendous interest in the deepest affairs of the soul. The new evangelist may be wholly different from the old as to methods, but his coming is among the unexpected things likely to happen."

The Blazek twins Rosa and Josefa, over whose case medical experts in London are greatly interested, are said to present an even more remarkable phenomenon than the Siamese twins who lived from 1811 to 1874. From the waist up they are separate; also they have between them four legs, for which one body has to serve. One will sleep or read while the other plays on the violin—an instrument which both play fairly well. One may be sick while the other feels no disturbance. Their tastes are by no means identical. Rosa liking sweets, while Josefa prefers pickles. In childhood they found it hard to keep the peace in their common tenement of clay, and if they happened to want to go in different directions Rosa settled the matter off-hand by lifting her sister off the ground and carrying her in the desired direction. They were born in Bohemia in 1878, and have been exhibited widely, but until lately have not been under the observation of scientists, who find some curious psychological problems involved.

From the news reports of Secretary Taft's visit to Panama, the President's right-hand man evidently had no difficulty in adjusting the delicate questions he was sent to solve. The United States has yielded, through the recommendations of the War Secretary, in regard to the customs regulation and international postage on the canal strip. A curious condition of postal regulations had obtained in Panama. That country, as an independent nation, had established the rates of the International Postal Union. Within the canal strip United States postal rates prevailed. It cost two cents to send a letter from there to the United States. The people of Panama objected to this, which they believed was a cutting of the rates. Secretary Taft decided that they were in the right. He also reported favorably on the abandonment of the United States customs system in the territory covered by the treaty. The Panama Government, if Secretary Taft's recommendations are approved, hereafter will assess and collect duties on all ordinary imports to the canal zone. Articles intended for the personal use of employees of the Canal Commission will, however, be exempt. As it is realized that since it will take some time to complete the building of the canal, this country would do well to retain the friendship of the Panamanians, the compromise was the more easily effected.

Now, it is mad, it is driveling to talk of regulating the traffic in intoxicating beverages, raise the charge for license to $10,000 and enact that nobody but a doctor of divinity shall be allowed to sell, and you will have no material improvement on the state of things now presented, because so long as one man is licensed to sell, thousands will sell without license. The law is robbed of all moral sanction and force by the fact that it grants dispensations to some who do with impunity and for their own profit that which is forbidden to others.—Horace Greeley, in Tribune.

SOCIAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD

Studies in Human and Divine Inter-Relationship

BY

RUFUS M. JONES, A. M., Litt. D.

PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN HAVERFORD COLLEGE

This is a fresh interpretation of the deepest problems of life. The author tells in straightforward and untechnical language what it means to be a person. He points out that to be a person one must be bound up in organic relation with many persons, and step by step he reaches the discovery that this social relationship stretches from earth to heaven—that God and man are also bound together in organic relationship. He shows how the search for God reveals this. How the great mystics have realized it, how the movement of Quakerism illustrates it, how both Faith and Reason unite to proclaim it, and finally how the New Testament confirms this central idea of the Divine-Human life. The book is full of optimism and good cheer.

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. JUST ISSUED FROM THE PRESS OF THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO.

HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE

Told for Young and Old

By JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

Regular Contributor of Notes on Lessons in "Sunday-School Times," and Author of "Revised Normal Lessons," "Studies in Old Testament History," "Studies in the Four Gospels," Etc., Etc.

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presbyt'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine!"

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminently a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

By special arrangement we are permitted to offer this book with One Year's Subscription to The American Friend for the Price of the Book Alone, $2.50. (ADD 35 CENTS FOR EXPRESSAGE.)

AT LAST.

"When on my day of life the night is falling,
And, in the winds from unsunned spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown."

"Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;

O Love Divine, O Helper ever present,
Be thou my strength and stay.

"Be near me when all else is from me
drifting—

Earth, sky, home's picture, days of shade and shine,

And kindly faces to my own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

"I have but Thee, O Father! Let Thy spirit

Be with me then to comfort and uphold;

No gate of pearl, no branch of palm, I merit,

Nor street of shining gold.

"Suffice it if, my good and ill unreckoned,

And both forgiven: through Thy abounding grace,

I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place—

"Some humble door among Thy many mansions,

Some sheltering shade, where sin and striving cease,

And flows forever through heaven's green expansions

The river of Thy peace.

"There, from the music round about me stealing,

I fain would learn the new and holy song,

And find at last beneath Thy trees of healing

The life for which I long."

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

A stranger came into an Augusta bank the other day and presented a check for which he wanted the equivalent in cash.

"Have to be identified," said the clerk.

The stranger took a bunch of letters from his pocket, all addressed to the same name as that on the check.

The clerk shook his head.

The man thought a minute and pulled out his watch, which bore the name on its inside cover.

Clerk hardly glanced at it.

The man dug into his pockets and found one of those "If-I-should-die-tonight-please-notify-my-wife" cards, and called the clerk's attention to the description, which fitted to a T.

But the clerk was still obdurate.

"Those things don't prove anything," he said. "We've got to have the word of a man that we know."

"But, man, I've given you an identification that would convict me of murder in any court in the land!"

"That's probably very true," responded the clerk, patiently, "but in matters connected with the bank we have to be more careful."—Pittsburg

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us
our daily dose of sulphur and molasses
every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall
"blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy
was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur
for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health:
sulphur acts directly on the liver and
excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations
of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says:
"For liver, kidney and blood troubles,
especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood
"purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

QUAKER BOOKS

It is often said nowadays that new life and vigor is being manifested by the Society of Friends.

We believe this is true; we know that the demand for Quaker books is increasing.

A religious body that is keenly interested in its own past history is one that is to-day making history.

The early history of the Quakers in Pennsylvania is one of the world's crucial periods. President Sharpless's book on this period, "A Quaker Experiment in Government," is the only scholarly and sufficient statement of its history from the Quaker standpoint. The question of whether Quakerism shall live or die is almost the same as the question whether Quakerism did or did not justify itself during its tenure of power in early Pennsylvania history.

President Sharpless's book has just been reissued in a New Illustrated Edition containing all the matter and all the pictures of the Haverford Edition, which sold for $7.50. The price of the new edition is $2.00 in cloth, $3.00 in half morocco.

FERRIS & LEACH

One of the greatest annoyances the particular housekeeper finds in living in a smoky city is that the lustre of her furniture soon becomes dull and is lost in a smutty haze. A thick suds of Ivory Soap in lukewarm water and a soft cloth will make it bright again with small labor. Ordinary soaps are too harsh but the Ivory Soap is fitted for all such special uses, because it is pure and mild, yet effective.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND. MORE BLESSED.

BY LINDLEY M. STEVENS.

"Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said,
It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Dost thou give for the blessing of giving,
For the blessing of giving dost pray,
With a thought of its fullness receiving,
Half believing the words thou dost say?
May the Master, who seeketh for merit,
Save the wheat from the deed and desire,
But a breath from the fan of the Spirit
Blow the chaff of thy thought to the fire.

For the words were the words of the Giver,
And His life was the gift that He gave;
And the blessing returneth forever
To the life that was lost for to save:
Greater blessing He knoweth in heaven,
Greater joy when a sinner believed
Than the soul unto whom it was given
Ever knew from the pardon received.

Of that blessing, the greater, wouldst gather?
Thou must learn by the way of the less,
And receive from the hand of the Father
Of the things that thy spirit shall bless:
Greater hunger shall be to thy spirit,
Greater thirst shall thy heart know to give Than to him who thy gift shall inherit
Shall be hunger and thirst to receive.

When thou bringest thy gift from the altar
Then a blessing thy brother shall know;
Never prayer for thine own shalt thou falter,
For thy fullness shall twice overflow:
When it passeth from God to another,
As thou seest thy brother have need,
When it passeth to God from thy brother
As he blesseth the Lord for thy deed.

THE CHILDLIKE SPIRIT.

THIS WORLD has nothing finer to show than the simple spirit of love and trust. Those who teach us best and who teach us most of actual life are persons of simple faith, happy confidence and a quiet practice of love, sympathy and the long list of homely virtues. What a world this would be if everybody in it were as good as are some of these quiet spirits whom we know, but of whom the great world never hears.

The doubter and the questioner disturb us with their endless problems, as though the world were a great bundle of interrogation points. There can be little peace so long as every sentence begins with a "what" or a "why." What a relief it is to escape from this turmoil of "queries" and to find a person who lives in the calm strength of "the everlasting yea!"

How is this "calm strength," this simple power acquired? Not surely by blind faith. Not by hiding away in ignorance, like the ostrich. Not by the dogmatic temper of mind. Not by slavishly following custom and tradition, as though things were proved true simply because grandfathers thought so! No, that method often produces a very poor kind of life, and is never the path to real power. The true path is more positive.

The calm strength of the true life is always found in persons who test their faith by living by it. They carry no unused baggage. They translate all their beliefs and doctrines into actual stuff of life. Their system of doctrines is like the skeleton in the body. It is not carried as a load. It is the inward strength and firmness which gives the body power to bear burdens and to do positive work. Each new truth grows out of what has already been tried and tested and found solid in the stress and strain of living. A faith like that can no more be lost than life itself can be. It is an inherent part of the structure.

The healthy boy never stops to ask what makes him healthy. He never worries about losing his health. He lives by it, acts upon it and so adds more cubits to his stature, more pounds to his weight and new strength to his muscle. Somewhat so the true believer starts with a simple, unanalyzed, childlike faith and tries it. He sees whether it will work. He is told of the love of God for him. He believes it and goes to living as though he knew it was so. It makes his whole life glad and happy. It gives him a sense of dignity and worth. It makes him afraid of wasting life on follies. In a word, he practices the love of God and it rests him through and through. It answers a host of his "whys" and "whats." It centers him, establishes him, builds strength into him. So, too, with all the items of his faith. He does not need to defend them loudly or to grow red in the face in his efforts to proclaim them. He uses them, as a healthy child uses his food, to build more bone and fibre.

Sooner or later all the neighbors believe in such a man or woman. They count on such a person. They set their spiritual watches by him. They know that his religion will wear. They do not need to have a printed statement of his creed. They see the name in the forehead and they know that God has been at work on that individual.

A MOVEMENT FOR BETTER DIVORCE LAWS.

FRIENDS in the State of Indiana started a movement last year to secure more satisfactory divorce laws in that state. After much thought had been given to the subject it was decided to call together members of all the Protestant churches for some definite action. This meeting occurred in Indianapolis on the 6th inst. and was attended by prominent representatives of the different churches, the larger proportion being Friends.

Six provisions were formulated by these representative men, and a great effort will be made to secure a state law embodying these provisions, which are as follows:

1. After a divorce suit is filed, the trial shall be deferred from three months to one year.
2. Three years' residence in a county shall be required before a divorce suit can be filed.
3. Uncorroborated testimony of the plaintiff or defendant shall not be accepted by the court in the trial of a divorce action.
4. When the commission of a crime is sufficient reason for the granting of a divorce, it should be made a cause for the punishment of the wrong-doer, and the prosecuting attorney should be compelled to prosecute the case.
5. Limited divorces for a considerable time should be granted and punishment for bigamy should be inflicted if a marriage is contracted before the expiration of the time specified in the limited divorce decree.
6. The guilty party should not be allowed to remarry as long as the cause for which the divorce was granted exists.

A committee was appointed to draw up a legislative bill embodying these six provisions.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IN ANOTHER part of the paper we print an article by J. Brierley, under the caption, "A Layman's Religion." It well deserves the attention of all our readers. The article was written in connection with a series of "open letters" in the London Daily Telegraph, a series of letters from all classes of people on the subject, "Do We Believe?" No subject in recent years has called forth such a mass of correspondence.

The writer of this letter is a well-known Congregationalist. His views on the importance of maintaining the lay character of Christianity can hardly be overestimated, and it is now and always the main mission of Quakerism.

THERE IS a wide-spread movement underway in the State of New York to amend and "improve" the Raines liquor law. It certainly needs it! This movement is headed by the Anti-Saloon League and has the active support of 3,000 churches throughout the State. It is proposed to amend the law so as to abolish the "fake" hotels which have sprung up under the protection of this law. There are many heavy counts against the Raines law, but the creation of these iniquitous hotels is surely the worst. The main result has been to concentrate man's two most dreadful vices under one roof. The working of the law brings financial advantage to so many persons that at present it seems well-nigh impossible to overthrow it. It will, however, be some moral gain to remove the worst feature of it, namely, the spurious hotels which have sprung up and been sheltered under its provisions.

BY ACTUAL count there are 1,600 Friends, of our branch, whose membership is enrolled in the Monthly Meetings within the city limits of Philadelphia. They form numerically a very tiny fraction in a city population of a million and a quarter. Nevertheless, they exert an influence out of all proportion to their numbers. It is somewhat significant that the two greatest movements to reform the city government during this generation have been headed by Friends. Philip C. Garrett was chairman of the "Committee of One Hundred," which valiantly worked for reform a score of years ago. John C. Winston was chosen to be the chairman of the present movement. It is further interesting to note that the Committee of Seven appointed to draw up a definite plan of reform includes a Friend, Frederic H. Strawbridge. All three of these men are graduates of Haverford College.

One of the illusions is that the present hour is not the critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No one has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is Doomsday. He only can enrich me who can recommend me the space between sun and sun. 'Tis the measure of a man—his apprehension of a day.—Emerson.

A LAYMAN'S RELIGION.

BY J. BRIERLEY.

The clerical deliverances on the question are not in the front rank of interest. It is the layman's voice that is being listened to.

The words that have sunk deepest into the public mind are of those who discuss religion from the standpoint of simple manhood, and not from that of a professional interest.

The clerical testimony to religion is, in fact and inevitably, taken with a certain discount. The ecclesiastic, it is felt, is committed to a certain position and cannot help himself. Amongst the working classes this view of things is especially widespread, and accounts largely for their present coolness towards Christianity and churches. There is no doubt as to the fact, but many of us, both inside and outside the Church, have not yet taken the trouble to understand what the fact means, nor the conclusions to which it points. It is not too hard to say, however, that the whole fortune of the churches and of Christianity depends on the way in which, in the future, the fact is comprehended and acted upon.

It is by an instinct which is essentially sound that the clergy, as such, are at a discount as a religious witness. The reason is that in so far as they, as a class, are separated from the laity, they are in a false position. Their position is false at once historically and by the nature of things. For primitive Christianity was essentially a layman's religion. It was this, in part, which constituted its utterly revolutionary character. Against all precedent and usage here was a faith with a layman for its founder and laymen for its first propagators. Jesus had no connection with the clerical order, nor had His followers. Not one of His first disciples was in any sense a "reverend gentleman." The virulent opposition of the Jewish ecclesiastics was largely a trades-union opposition. A religion without priests and sacrifices was to them, not only the most daring of innovations; it meant destruction to the privileges and emoluments of their order. No wonder at the priestly hue and cry, or at the final tragedy at Jerusalem. Calvary was, in the eyes of the Judean "cloth," fit punishment for the unheard-of insolence of a lay religion.

During the first period after the death of its founder, Christianity still held to this distinctive and wholly revolutionary feature. The New Testament religion is from beginning to end a lay religion.

And the society was constituted on a lay basis. As a great missionary organization it had, of course, a teaching function, but there is not anywhere discernable so much as the flutter of a sacerdotal robe. There are elders, overseers, prophets, evangelists, deacons, "helps," "ministries," but there are no priests. We hear of no clerical garments. The apostles dressed like other men.

But the primitive Christianity did not last. In what followed that first stage we have the greatest perversion in history. The new was conquered by the old. The pure stream, leaping from the utmost heights, fell into the sluggish river below, to take its color and to follow its course.

As a result of the compromise we have in the following centuries a Christianity which is an amalgam of the teaching and life of Jesus with the priestism and clericalism with which Judaism and heathendom had combined to endow it. Christianity had ceased henceforth to be a layman's religion.

How the change worked is now a matter of history.

Priesthood and monkhood, in all their degrees, were alike the assertion of the same principle—the principle of separation, of a class, a caste, theoretically superior in Christian privilege, function and authority from the commonalty. It was the principle of religious professionalism. Its first result was upon the clergy themselves. What a picture is that which Jerome draws of the Roman clergy in his day, gaining favor with the rich by pretended austerities, while they repaid themselves with nightly revelry.

Thus was it with the clergy. It fared worse with the laity, who, shut off from their heritage of responsibility and service, were lost for centuries to vital religion.

The Reformation was, for one thing, a revolt against all this; an endeavor to make Christianity once again a layman's religion. . . . The gist of Protestantism was in this, that the layman had once more found his soul. He had opened the New Testament to discover with astonishment and delight a religion without a priest. That discovery produced the Puritan and the Huguenot, the sturdiest manhood of these later ages.

The vital religious movements ever since have been essentially laymen's movements. Zinzendorf, the founder of the Moravian community, was a layman. John Wesley obtained his most vivifying spiritual experience from his contact with Peter Böhler, the Moravian, also a layman. And Wesley's first preachers, with whom he woke up England, were a band of laymen. To-day General Booth's vast evangelizing work the world over is conducted by lay people. D. L. Moody, the greatest missionary of our generation, was a layman. France to-day would not be, as it is, in revolt against Christianity were it not that in expelling its Huguenots three centuries ago it thrust from its borders the exponents of a laymen's religion, leaving the land the prey to a professionalism which the nation refuses any longer to endure.

But what primitive Christianity and all the later history do teach is plain enough. Clericalism as an evil can only be avoided by putting the teaching order on the primitive basis. It is to be ever of the people, and with the people and for the people. Nonconformity has more than justified its existence if only by the assertion of this single principle.

All sections of the Church have to relearn this lesson if they are going to save religion for the people. Nonconformists not a few need to learn it afresh. Let them be done for ever with dressings up and gestures and postures. There is a professional smile and a professional tone that are alike detestable. Let the teacher be one with the common life of the people. Let him never by any assumption of his own permit the business man to suppose that his participation in the duties of the Divine kingdom has been transferred to other shoulders. In a word, let Christianity resume its place as a layman's religion; let the great Layman, its first Teacher, be permitted once more to exhibit, without veil or intermediary, His Divine life and doctrine, and again, as of old, the common people will hear Him gladly.

"ME YE HAVE NOT ALWAYS."

BY JOHN E. MCFADYEN.

Jesus is a continual surprise. He always does the original thing, says the unexpected thing. His deeds and words are a source of astonishment even to the disciples who know and love Him best. Those whom they rebuke, He welcomes; and on those with whom they are indignant, He bestows the loftiest and most deliberate commendation. Verily His ways are not as their ways, and perhaps still less as our ways.

No one could be long with Jesus without learning that He loved the poor; and it is hardly surprising that when a woman, in the wealth of her devotion, broke a box of very precious ointment and poured it over the head of her Lord, the disciples were indignant and harsh. They counted her act one of foolish extravagance and condemned it in words which we might almost imagine were the Master's own. "What is the good of such waste?" they say; "for this ointment might have been sold and given to the poor." It would not have been hard to believe that these were words of Jesus' own—words of mild rebuke to the eager woman who had forgotten how dear the poor were to Jesus. But no! The surprise is here as everywhere. What Jesus said was very different: "Leave her alone; it is a beautiful work that she has wrought upon Me. For ye have the poor with you all the time, but Me ye have not always." Jesus has not forgotten His love for the poor, nor has He forgotten how much might be done with the money; but the poor might be helped at any time, while if He was to be thus honored, it must be now or never. There is a time to sell the precious ointment, and a time to break the box and pour its treasure over the head of Jesus; and happy is he who knows these times and seasons.

Jesus is here enunciating, in His own inimitable way, the great truth of the relative value of opportunities. The good is not the best; and His words suggest that the man who would do homage to the best must be daring enough to rise above the temptation to be merely good, or to govern his life by the standards even of a noble convention. Jesus came not to be ministered unto, yet He was glad, very glad, when such spontaneous ministrations came. Though meek and lowly, He unhesitatingly accepted the costliest service, and counted Himself worthy of the noblest that men could offer. He loved the poor, but to Him life had other than economic aspects; and amid the cruelty, suspicion and misunderstanding that clouded the last of His earthly days, He welcomed with peculiar joy the daring generosity of this woman's heart.

The great words in which Jesus justified the breaking of the alabaster box in His own behalf, embody a principle which should run through all wise life. The words were these: "The poor ye have always with you; but Me ye have not always." The principle is this—that opportunities differ in value and importance, and that wisdom consists in reading their value aright and in selecting the one which will not be always with us. Certain things may be done at any time; certain other things must be done now or never. Certain privileges may be enjoyed at any time; certain others, now or never. Every life is confronted at many points with this strange contrast—between the ordinary opportunities which come with every day, and some great opportunity which, if not grasped at once, may vanish forever. The pathetic commonplace is ever about us; but unique opportunities are not always with us. They are rare. Sometimes they come to us but once; and though we should wait for a century, they would never come again.

Every life, whether blessed with academic privileges or not, has unique opportunities of its own. The Sabbath day—do we use it for better things? The holiday—do we let it bring us nearer the God of the mountains and the sea? The rare opportunities of travel—what do we do with them? Are we of those who would rather discuss politics or theology with the stranger beside us than observe some smiling landscape through which we are gliding? or of those who would rather read a newspaper than watch a sunset? Common days and common sights will come again; but to him that hath ears to hear, every unique opportunity rings out the reminder, "The poor ye have always with you, but Me ye have not always." And if we cannot distinguish between opportunities, we have yet much to learn from Jesus.

Perhaps there are few who realize the transiency of the home. As each day runs its commonplace round, the unspeakable privilege of living in the most intimate communion with those whom of all the world we love the most, is apt to be forgotten. There may indeed be kindness enough; but how much more tender and affectionate it might be if we remembered how frail are the bonds that unite us, and how soon some of them will be broken.

It is proper and necessary that friendships be formed outside of the family circle; for the home does not exhaust the great world, and only in the duties and friendships of the larger life beyond it can our nature be even approximately completed. Nor can we forget that sometimes friends may be "more than my brothers are to me."

Still, the home includes the most intimate and sacred of all relationships; and there is something almost awe-inspiring in the swiftness with which they can be sundered. In a year or two, a month or two, sometimes,—indeed, in a moment,—its seeming permanence dissolves, and the happy circle becomes but a memory—a vision seen through blinding tears. A man may find friends—though perhaps not many—anywhere and at any time; but the dear faces of the home are not with us always. The claims of business, profession or pleasure, may take the son to a far country; and when he comes back, his mother is in her grave. And then how he wishes he had worked a good work upon her when she was with him! Yes! now he would break his costliest alabaster box a thousand times over for her gentle sake. But she is sleeping her dreamless sleep, and the dear lips are cold.

"Me ye have not always with you." Oh, why do we take so long to learn a lesson so simple? Sooner or later, every home crumbles away; but as we gather round the table we never think of this. It is not well that such a thought should haunt us forever, but surely it should visit us sometimes. The brother is rough to the sister, the son is rude to the father, the husband is a little unmindful of the wife; and all the time they love each other. "What fools these mortals be!" Why should they forget that they have not each other forever, or that life is too short for strife? Marriage or business will separate them soon enough, or death will come with its more awful separation. And then those who are left will yearn, in bitter sincerity, for "the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still." But while the hand that will vanish is still with us, shall we not do something to lighten the burden of its toil? and while the voice still speaks that will one day be silent, shall we not listen to it with an almost tremulous sense of the privilege that is ours? Common friends we shall find again; but the well-beloved of our homes we shall not have always with us. While we have them, then, let us love them and cherish them and work a good work upon them, before the night cometh when we can work for them no more.

"LORD, SHEW US THE FATHER."

[A sermon by Charles Wagner, preached Eleventh month 13th, to more than one thousand people at Vassar College. Notes by J. L. Spicer.]

The French preacher is not handsome. He is strongly built, gray haired, with a firm set mouth, kindly eyes, but an earnest, emphatic manner like that of Jacob A. Riis and President Roosevelt. He offered a prayer in broken English, but God understood him. His approach was so reverent, so sure was he of the "One" with whom he conversed—a well-known friend and benefactor! There was no flippancy, no shocking familiarity, such as some evangelists affect. No! 'Twas an obedient, worshiping soul drawing near with humility, love and earnest expectation to his tender, sympathizing, but Almighty Father. "Oh, God be thou formed in our speech, and in our hearts. May our lives and service show the Father to a lost world." These were the opening sentences of the petition.

In the sermon he defined man as a "God seeker." "All things seek nourishment; as the flower seeks light, so the soul seeks God. The tree seeks what it most needs from the soil, and brings together what is necessary for its life. Philip expressed the crying need of the human soul, its thirst for God, its expectation, when he said, 'Shew us the Father.' We need a God who walks with us, who fights for us, who suffers with us."

"God is seen in all his works. In the glittering stars hung against the dark veil of night, in the whispering tree tops, the violet on the hillside, in the endless book he has written in letters of fire. Nature shows the everlasting proof of a God behind nature."

"But nature has no eyes to look upon our need; no ears to hear our cry for help. Nature forces us to cry aloud, 'Oh, that thou wouldst rend the heavens and come down,' and that fact has been accomplished in Jesus Christ. He revealed all of God man can understand. No longer an unseen God, but God with us. We understand best from the human side."

"As the Father is revealed in Christ so must we show Him to the world. God can declare Himself in your life. You can be a lesson of light, comfort and the higher life or a revelation of darkness, sorrow and sin. You can stand as a shadow to veil the face of God from human hearts, or you can be in the light and catch the shadows as they fall on other lives."

"Are we messengers of the night or of the coming day? The result of a bad life is to make others think the world were better had we not lived: such a life is destructive. You can be eyes to see God for those groping in darkness. You may co-operate with Christ in showing the Father by tenderness, by smiling faces, by suffering and burden-bearing to help those who suffer, and who bear heavy burdens. To those going aside you can resemble God. You can be hands for God in bestowing His gifts. You can love more, and so bring men back to God. We may be living witnesses of the unseen God."

"Afflictions are often only the open door through which we catch glimpses of the fuller revelation of our Father's love. Don't think suffering is all—the way you bear trials will inspire others, and blessings will come back to you."

"The worst heresy is not to believe in humanity. If one does not believe in humanity, in young people, in children, he does not believe in God, for God believes in all of these. Every man is the hope of God. If you say you are too bad, too sinful,—that you cannot live aright and continue, you do not believe God. God comes to the aid of humanity. God loves the sin-stained. If you believe in God, believe in yourself, in mankind. By believing; in earnest living, earnest striving and earnest loving, you can and will, as a child of God, overcome sin by righteousness, and be a partaker in the joys of His kingdom."

JANIE'S OPPORTUNITY.

BY ALIX.

"Why, Janie, what is the matter?" said Miss Morton, as, pausing at the door of a small house in a narrow street, she saw the little Sabbath School scholar she had come to visit, sitting with her face buried in her hands, in an attitude of hopeless despondency. Janie rose hastily, at the sound of the kind voice, and her tears broke forth afresh as she answered:

"I was just thinking over the last lesson you taught us, about being gentle and forgiving, but it is of no use for me to try; no one could be good who had to live in the house with a person so hateful as Martha."

"Who is Martha?" asked Miss Morton, gently, as she sat down by the little girl, and took her hand.

"She is my sister; and because she is a few years older than myself, she puts everything on me to do. Only to-day, she knew that I was invited out to spend the afternoon, and so she hurried to ask mother first to let her go to choose her new bonnet, and has left me all the work to do." And Janie glanced indignantly at a pile of unwashed dishes on the table.

"And yesterday, when the minister called to see us, he asked for the Bible, and when mother brought it, it was covered with dust, and Martha laughed, and said, 'We will have to get Janie a pair of spectacles,' and then mother looked at me reprovingly, and the minister laid his hand on my head and said, 'I hope this little girl will remember that cleanliness is next to godliness,' and I felt as though I should sink through the floor."

"Now it is just as much her place to keep things clean as it is mine, but she always throws the blame of everything on me. After I have worked and worked, if one little thing goes wrong, she calls mother's attention to it, and I get scolded; and if I try to defend myself in the least, it makes a quarrel, and then she says that I am no Christian. Now is it not too hard?"

"It is hard, Janie, but whether it is too hard, depends upon whether you love yourself or Christ the best. It seems to me that He is giving you a great many opportunities of glorifying Him."

Janie looked up in blank astonishment. "What can you mean?" she said.

"I mean that every aggravating thing that happens to us, gives us a fresh chance of overcoming our evil natures, and proving to those around us that the strength that the Saviour gives us is real strength, and that is glorifying Him, is it not?"

"I never thought of it in that way before," answered Janie, "but I suppose it is."

"I think that life will look very different to you, if you will really take in that thought," said Miss Morton. "When Martha does unkind things, and imposes upon you, think here is an opportunity of showing sister, who does not love Jesus, that I do love Him and am trying to serve Him. If you are quite in earnest in the matter, I think she will learn to believe at last that it means something to be a Christian."

"But I have such a quick temper myself," said Janie, sorrowfully.

Jesus has promised, "that with every temptation, he will make a way of escape, that we may be able to bear it. Often the heaviest cross he lays upon Christians, is bearing the unkindness and injustice of those around them; but remember, my little girl, 'No cross no crown.'"

As Miss Morton turned away from the door, Janie ran cheerily to get hot water for her dishes, and when Martha returned, she could meet her with a pleasant smile, and without one feeling of anger in her heart.

SINNERS, ALL.

Marie Adams was a very young mother, but she had no hesitation in laying down the law about her first baby. This was her most thrilling announcement: "The baby is not to be rocked, not under any circumstances. I know, mamma—of course you will say you rocked me; but I have attended ten lectures on the way to bring up a baby, and this child is not to be rocked. The lecturer said rocking a child joggles its brains. I'm sure you don't want your child to grow up an imbecile, do you, Harry?"

"Certainly not," said Harry firmly. He had an idea that it would be fun to rock the baby, but of course Marie must know.

Marie Adams had every rocking chair removed from her room. When it was time for the baby's nap he was simply laid on the bed, and left to himself. If he cried, he had his cry out uncomfited. At such times the baby's grandmother would retire from the scene in wrath.

"What's a baby for if not to take a little comfort with?" she asked the nurse; but the nurse, smiling, said nothing.

When the baby was four weeks old, grandma carried him up into a vacant bedroom on the third floor. Her daughter was taking a nap; her son-in-law was down in the library. There was a glitter in her eyes and a red spot on each cheek. She drew a rocking chair into the middle of the floor, adjusted the wondering baby, and rocked fiercely, triumphantly. After about ten minutes of this indulgence she was brought to an abrupt pause by a voice from the doorway.

"He seems to like it, doesn't he?" asked her son-in-law.

When she saw the covetous glint in his eyes, the erring grandmother took heart. Without a word she got up, laid the baby in the young father's arms, and motioned to the chair. "You try it," said she.

For the next two weeks their guilty secret drew the two very near together. As often as possible they slipped away and rocked the baby. They marveled at the young mother who had the courage to carry out her Spartan theories.

One day Harry came home early. There was a low, melodious hum from his wife's room, and he crept to the door. There she was in a low chair, rocking back and forth, her baby in her arms. It was a charming picture. A movement startled her, and she turned. She blushed guiltily, and then took on a look of bravado. "I—I couldn't help it," she faltered.

FIRST QUARTER.

LESSON I.

FIRST MONTH 1, 1905.

CHRIST THE LIFE AND LIGHT OF MEN.

John 1: 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In him was life; and the life was the light of men.—John 1: 4.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Twelfth mo. 26.—Christ the life and light. John 1: 1-18.

Third-day, Twelfth mo. 27.—John's witness. John 1: 19-24.

Fourth-day, Twelfth mo. 28.—Son of God. John 1: 25-34.

Fifth-day, Twelfth mo. 29.—Life and Light. 1 John 1.

Sixth-day, Twelfth mo. 30.—Life by Christ. 1 John 5.

Seventh-day, Twelfth mo. 31.—Light of the world. John 8: 12-19.

First-day, First mo. 1.—Receive the Light. John 12: 35-46.

Time.—The birth of Christ is now universally accepted as having taken place in the year we call 5 B. C. A mistake of four years was made in the reckoning, which was stated by Dionysius Exiguus, 533 A. D. Jesus Christ began His ministry in A. D. 27, and John bore witness to Him in the same year.

The Apostle John was a native of Bethsaida on the Sea of Galilee. His mother was Salome (Mark 15: 40), his father Zebedee (Matt. 4: 21), who appears to have been well-off. The date of his birth is not known, but tradition says he was the youngest of twelve apostles, and was doubtless younger than Christ by three or four years. According to tradition he was the only one of the twelve who died a natural death; and it is also said that he was the last survivor, dying as late as the year 98 A. D.; which would make his age between ninety-five and one hundred years.

The Fourth Gospel was written in Greek, and probably somewhere between the years 80 and 95 A. D.

The object which the Evangelist placed before himself was to show that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God" (20: 31), and the whole Gospel is full of this theme. The lesson comprises the author's prologue or summary of the contents. It may be divided into three parts: (1) verses 1-5, (2) 6-13, (3) 14-18.

(1) The Word in His original relations.

1. "In the beginning." Here the expression doubtless is used in a timeless sense; the human mind cannot conceive of the beginning of an eternal Being or of eternity. Compare Gen. 1: 1; 1 Jno. 1: 1; Jno. 17: 5. "Was." Existed. "Word." The Greek is "Logos," or "the outward form by which the inward thought is expressed"; and so in Christ the wisdom, power and love of God are expressed in the human form. As a personal title of Christ, Logos is used only in this verse and in verse 14. "With." Not proximity only, but a personal presence and relation. See verse 18; Mark 6: 3. "Was God." Possessed of the nature and attributes of God.

2. An emphatic re-statement and brief combination of the statements of verse 1.

3. "God's word is His will going forth with creative energy and communicating life from God, the source of life and being." Compare Jno. 5: 26. "Not anything." Literally, "Not even one thing."

4. "Life." The true spiritual and eternal life which consists in communion with God. "The light." Not "a light" or "light," but "the light." "The life in men derived from the Word is the light of men." Compare Jno. 8: 12; Ps. 36: 9.

5. The meaning here is probably general and not confined to the Gospel light. All through the ages God's light has been shining in the darkness and the darkness has comprehended it not. The word translated "comprehended" is translated elsewhere "overtake," "come upon" (e. g., Jno. 12: 35; 1 Thess. 5: 4); should that meaning be given here it would read, "and the darkness overcame it not," that is, the darkness could not quench the light.

(2) The Word in His historic manifestations (6-13). The transition is to the tangible, historic witness.

6. "There came a man," R. V. In contrast to the "was" in verse 1. "Man." In contrast to the Logos. "Sent." Compare Mal. 3: 1; 4: 5. "John." John the Baptist; so called by the other evangelists to distinguish him from the Apostle John, but never so called in this Gospel.

7. "For witness," R. V. To bear witness not to be "a witness." See Jno. 5: 33-35; Acts 10: 37. "Through him." Through John. See 1: 31; 20: 31. The first disciples of Jesus had been disciples of John.

8. "John was the lamp, not the light."

9. "There was the true light, even the light which lighteth every man, coming into the world," R. V. In the original the participle "coming" is ambiguous; grammatically it may be put either with "man," or with "light." The Authorized Version chose the former, the Revised the latter. Christ was the true light even before He came into the world in human form. This is a great Quaker text. Compare Jno. 3: 19; 12: 46.

10. "Knew him not." Did not recognize his claims.

11. "His own." His own things or his own home. "His own." The reference is to the Jews, his own kith and kin.

12. "Received him." Not the same word as in verse 11, but one implying individual reception. "To them gave he the right," etc., R. V. The word means more than "ability"; those who receive Christ have the right or privilege to be members of God's family—His sons and daughters. Rom. 8: 14-17; Gal. 4: 5-7; 1 Jno. 5: 1, 12.

13. This verse is given to make it clear beyond a doubt that the sonship is a spiritual one. "Will of the flesh"; natural instincts: "will of man"; human volition: "will of God"; regeneration through God's spirit.

(3) His incarnate revelation of the Father.

14. "The Word became flesh," R. V. This is "the most profound mystery of the Christian faith." Flesh means here human nature in its entirety. The Logos became not a man, but man. He took upon him our human nature. Heb. 2: 14; 1 Tim. 3: 16; 1 Jno. 4: 2. "In addition to what He already was, He assumed human nature, at once enlarging his experience and limiting His present manifestations of Divinity to what was congruous to human nature and earthly circumstance." "Dwelt." Tabernacled, as Jehovah tabernacled among the old Jews. The parentheses bear testimony to the glory which John and his fellow disciples beheld in Jesus—the allusion is to the Shechinah under the old covenant. "Full of grace and truth." Grace is the manifestation of Divine love; Truth is the manifestation of Divine light showing the Father as He really is, and revealing to men their own state.

15, 16. The witness of the Baptist. See also verse 30. "Grace for grace." Grace added to grace.

17. "For." The obvious contrast between the Law and Gospel. "Law required; grace gives; law exposed and condemned sin; grace takes sin away and pardons it. Law was a shadow of things to come; the fulness and completeness of truth is in Christ.

18. Christ is the highest and last exponent of God."

"That thy progress may be manifest" is a worthy purpose to propose and to control our own planning for the New Year. Paul declares his purpose when he names the "one thing" that his life was centered upon.

Every living creature has its goal to attain, which certain powers and material existences contribute, so that from the various subordinate elements is formed a higher organic being. If there were nothing for man beyond this world, the moral indifference of the old Hebrews who said, "Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die," might seem less blameworthy. But since all that is highest and best over-lies and survives the mere physical existence, we are constrained to use present experiences and opportunities as contributory material, as elements subordinate to something which is to be realized only by giving heed to the call to spiritual growth and achievement.

There is much for us to rejoice in in this day, that we look upon the world as a place in which man may live with gladness, using its goods as gifts of a loving Father. Yet we must not be so encumbered with the walls and wrappings of earthly habitations and vestments as to miss the "better things" which are likewise just at hand.

The intervening thing, whether material or ideal, must be the object of our first conquest. The overcoming faith that is itself victory will give their rightful place to these transitory and incidental matters, and set us in the way of advancement by showing us the Christ ideal,—to do always the things that please God,—making it at the same time the object of our confident aspiration.

The "worth while" test is one that can always be used with profit when goals are suggested. Since we are "going this way but once," what is best worth while as the best Teacher waits to show it to us, is really all we can afford to choose.

"Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness." He has a work, a life purpose; he has found it and will follow it.

"But let your communication be, Yea, yea." This is the rule of the Sermon on the Mount. It is well worth our remark that Jesus Christ, who generally dwells on the inner spirit of an action, on its motive and principle, here occupies Himself on the method, on the outside act, as if this were too important in this case to be passed by. The truth is that the habit of expression reacts on the man who speaks. The habit of exaggeration in speech distorts the observation and makes the conscience itself unreliable. And this other habit of under-statement, this pretended lassitude, which began only in the thought it is gentle to be interested in nothing, ends in making the temper as languid as it pretends to be.—E. E. Hale.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

The readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND have, from time to time, noticed the progress and needs of missions in Cuba. One of the present necessities in that field is buildings at Holguin. $5,000 is the amount required for this purpose.

A canvas among Friends has been made, $4,000 has been secured, and a Friend has offered to give the last $500 of the total amount needed.

The owner of the house now occupied by the mission at Holguin has asked that it be vacated or $60 per month be paid for it instead of the already high rate of $38 per month. This compels a move and as it is very difficult to secure a house, and those that can be secured are unfavorably located, the situation is very unsatisfactory.

We very much need to commence the buildings at once, and push their completion as fast as possible. Will not Friends please contribute to make up the $500 yet lacking.

Please respond at once by writing me saying that you will furnish a certain amount of this sum by Third month 1st, 1905, or if preferred send draft or post office order direct to James Carey, Jr., treasurer, 119 S. Fremont Street, Baltimore, and a postal to me that I may know the amount given. It is important that I know at once, as I wish to reach Cuba during the holidays and commence the work with the new year, which I trust may be happy and prosperous to all God's workmen in His great field.

Z. L. MARTIN.

Maryville, Tenn., December 9, 1904.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Stella Academy is prospering with an enrollment of fifty-eight.

The Friends at Cleo, Okla., have their nice church building nearly complete.

Esther Cook has been holding a series of meetings at the West Side Meeting in Chicago.

Jessie Wilmon, of Wichita, Kan., is engaged in a series of meetings at Newhope, Okla.

John T. Hadley is serving Amo Meeting as pastor the present year to the satisfaction of its membership.

Alpheus Trueblood is on his second year as pastor of the First Friends' Church at Marion, Ind., since Tenth month 1st.

A. Kenyon expects soon to hold meetings at Coldwater, Okla., with help of Quarterly Meeting Superintendent Alvan Coppock.

J. E. Dixon and Birthy, his wife, evangelists from Cleveland, Ohio, are engaged in a protracted meeting at Knightstown, Ind.

Minerva Hubbard, of Wichita, Kan., with a helper, expects to hold meetings at Harmony in Pawnee Co., Okla., beginning Christmas Day.

On the 26th ult., Ira Jackson, of Winchester Quarter, was acceptably in attendance at Knightstown Monthly Meeting. His Gospel message was well received.

We are sorry to learn that for the present Lowell Polytechnic Institute at Lowell, Kan., has been closed, as the local support is not sufficient to maintain it.

Revival meetings, which were to have begun the 5th inst. in Friends' Church, with help from Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, have been postponed, owing to sickness in the family of Morton Pearson.

An all-day missionary meeting was held in the meeting-house, Whittier, Cal., the 8th inst., which was very interesting and profitable. Many of California Yearly Meeting's best workers were present and assisted.

The committee appointed to draft a new legislative bill for better divorce laws in Indiana is composed of the following persons: Timothy Nicholson, chairman; W. S. Doan, El. F. Ritter, M. C. Pearson and W. S. Sigmund.

J. Lindley Spicer held a series of meetings at Collins, N. Y., from the 21st ult. to the 4th inst. Some souls were definitely blessed. On the 10th inst. a Junior Endeavor Society was organized.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting (Ind.) occurred the 9th to 12th inst. Lydia Pearson returned her minute for services in North Carolina. A collection of nearly one hundred dollars was raised for Foreign Mission Work in Mexico.

P. W. Raidabaugh and John T. Hadley attended the Meeting for Worship at Amo, Ind., on alternate Sabbaths during the past year. They did not labor together in the meeting at Danville, Ind., as was stated in an item in our issue of the 1st inst.

The twenty-second annual meeting of the Indian Rights Association was held at the Parish House, Twentieth Street below Walnut, Philadelphia, Twelfth month 15th, at 8 o'clock. Addresses were made by Anna Beecher Scoville, E. M. Street, Jr., Henry C. Cloud and S. M. Brosius. Edward M. Wistar presided.

The Friends at Alva, Okla., have a church building nearly completed, and expect to dedicate it and hold a series of meetings after the holidays. The meeting at that place is not very large. If some who read this feel they have some of the Lord's money to give for the work at that place, it would be thankfully received.

The death of Levi Rees will come as sad news to many Friends. He had been for some time in failing health, and had gone to California to recover his strength. But the recovery was not to be, and now he has finished his life of earnest, faithful service. Doubtless some Friend will send a definite notice of his departure.

New London Quarterly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, was held the 3d and 4th inst., and was a time of great blessing. Eliza C. Armstrong, president of the Foreign Missionary Board of Western Yearly Meeting; Asa Woodard, of Coloma, Ind., and Oliver N. Kenworthy, of California, were in attendance and their services were much appreciated.

Marion Quarterly Meeting was held at Marion, Ind., the 9th to 11th inst. The meeting was favored with the acceptable company of Millie M. Lawhead, of Van Wert, Ohio; Milton Cox, Hemlock, Howard Co., Ind.; William Thornberry, Amboy, Ind. "The Higher Life," "The Second Coming of Christ" and "The Freedom of the Spirit" were subjects dwelt upon during the meeting.

Quarterly Meeting was held at Portland, Ore., the 11th and 12th ult. The different sessions were seasons of great blessing. John F. Hansen and wife and Amos Kenworthy were in attendance; their services were a great uplift. On Sabbath the new church building was dedicated. It cost nearly $1,500 and is all paid for. It is a very neat structure, 50 by 32 feet, with the basement fitted for Sabbath-school work. H. E. McGrew preached the dedication sermon to a large audience.

Friends at Upland, Ind., are just completing a large and convenient church building. It will cost, when completed, about $5,500 and will seat about 400. The building is to be dedicated First month 1st. President Robert L. Kelley, of Earlham College, will deliver the dedication address. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to spend the day with Upland Friends. Those who expect to arrive on Seventh-day are asked to notify F. H. Tormohlen, so that arrangements for entertainment can be made.

Quarterly Meeting Missionary Sabbath services were held at Chester, Ind., the 11th inst., with a full house and much interest. A larger number of men than usual was present. Ida Roberts, of Westfield, having gone back with Sarah Lindley, to Mexico, an interesting letter from them was read, in which mention was made of the bad drinking water there. Men Friends promptly took up the matter, and in a short time a collection was taken up from them for the purchase of apparatus for distilling water at the mission station.

Millie M. Lawhead, of Van Wert, Ohio, and Nettie C. Springer, of Indianapolis, Ind., closed a three weeks' series of meetings on the evening of the 11th inst., at the First Friends' Church, Marion, Ind. Millie Lawhead, as an evangelist, and Nettie Springer, as a singer and worker, did excellent work. A number were converted, renewed and baptized with the Holy Ghost. Twelve applications for membership, with more to follow, is one of the evidences of the good work. Children's meetings were held several afternoons with good results.

Danville Quarterly Meeting, of Western Yearly Meeting, held at Amo, Ind., the 2d to 4th inst., was an occasion of blessing and profit. Nereus Hodgkin, pastor in the meeting at Monrovia, Ind., was present on Sixth-day and Seventh-day, the burden of his ministry being for the growth of the individual in grace and the advancement of the church in spiritual life and power. On the Sabbath day the commodious house was well filled, and the large audience gave close attention to the preaching of David Hadley on the subject of our high calling.

A large and interesting roll-call meeting was recently held by the Friends of New Castle, Ind., at the hour of morning worship. A letter of Christian greeting and friendly interest had been sent out in time to get responses from non-resident and absent members. Letters were also given to members and attenders of the meeting at home. There were responses by letter, testimony, prayer, texts of Scripture, religious quotations, etc., to the name when called. The meeting was of deep spiritual interest from the beginning to the close. The many responses cheered the hearts of all and brought all into closer Christian fellowship.

Here is a letter which indicates a healthy spirit. J. N. Walker, a member of Stella Quarterly Meeting, reporting from Dewey Co., Okla., to the recent Quarterly Meeting, stated that he had just closed a week's meeting, in which there were twelve conversions and renewals, making a total of about fifty during two years. He moved from Cherokee some time ago, and wrote back asking that some minister come and hold some meetings, but ministers were so busy there they did not get away and the people were so hungry for meetings they met together, and day after day souls were saved and they all wanted to join Friends. May the Lord send some live minister to this needy field.

Since Kansas Yearly Meeting, Nathan and Esther Frame have been doing a good work in the limits of Grand River Quarterly Meeting. A year ago they labored in this Quarterly Meeting, holding meetings at Ottawa Mission and Miami, I. T. Jeremiah Hubbard, pastor at Miami, said of those meetings that they had done more good to establish the people in the faith as held by Friends, than any that had ever been held there before. The series of meetings recently held by them at Lowell will long be remembered as one of the most blessed occasions of helpfulness that has come to that meeting for years. Their teaching and preaching was in the life and power of the Spirit. A number of persons gave their names to become members with Friends, the backslidden were renewed and sinners were converted.

On the 20th ult., Fred. T. Coppock, of Iowa, and Wilford Swofford, a singer, began revival services at Wichita Monthly Meeting, continuing until the 4th inst., holding sixteen sessions. From the very first the entire meeting was brought vitally under the influence of the ministry. Never before in the history of the meeting have Friends experienced as successful a revival, in which the business men and leading members of the meeting were led to consecrate their lives to God, and ask for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Two asked to unite with Friends. The pastor, L. Clarkson Hinshaw, who is now in his third year of pastoral work, has labored hard and won the confidence of all who know him. The meeting has decided to remodel the interior of the meeting-house, and will take steps for that purpose in the near future.

At Whittier Monthly Meeting of Friends, held the 12th ult., the meeting which had been known as Bell was permanently organized under the name of Greening. A house with furnishings and a lot had been purchased, and the dedicatory service arranged for Eleventh month 13th, with a series of evangelistic meetings to follow. This meeting is situated ten miles west of Whittier and four miles east of Los Angeles on the electric street car line. Certificates were received for F. G. I. Gibbs, wife and two children, from Southwalk Point, England; O. C. Albertson and wife, from Newberg, Ore.; Sarah and Nancy Wing, of Oskaloosa, Iowa. Letters of membership for the wife of Allen U. Tomlinson, from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of St. Louis, Mo.; Emma Pickering and I. H. Eckley, from the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Occidental, Cal.; Frank Martin and Bertha Vaughn, residents of Greening, were received by request.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting, held at Guilford College, N. C., the 10th inst., was preceded on the 9th by two conferences. One occupied the afternoon, the other the evening. In the former Mary E. Cartland, superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work, spoke on the "Support of the Work," and Royal J. Davis, a professor in the college, spoke of the "International Bible School Lessons for 1905." The latter conference was favored with an address from Jabez R. Mendenhall, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Bible Schools, and with a paper on "Bible School Work" from Mary M. Hobbs. Opportunity was given for voluntary discussion in both conferences, and many took part. The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight met before the Quarterly Meeting and proposed and discussed the "Preparation for the Ministry." A basket dinner was enjoyed, and a meeting for worship opened the way for the business session. Reports showed thirteen new members received during the past three months. Alder Larzerlere, a minister, was liberated for service in the Yearly Meeting. A missionary conference was held in the evening. The following day Jabez R. Mendenhall and Mary E. Cartland were blessed in preaching.

President Isaac Sharpless is quoted as having spoken as follows on the duties of Friends toward practical politics: "I believe," he says, "that party politics and the party machines have come to stay. In every avenue of life we have the machine. We have it exemplified in the labor organizations, the trusts, charity organizations and the institutional churches. The political machine is necessary to make the wants of the people in certain directions effective. And this calls for a counter-machine. We should work side by side with our fellow-citizens in the political organizations and convert the political machines into agents of good. To do this we must be willing to do the daily drudgery that machines require. It means not only to go to the primaries, but association with what are called in Philadelphia 'ward heelers.' We should do all we can to get in association with the Republican or the Democratic organization or whatever other political belief we happen to be. The man who can find no party to suit him is hopeless. The people of the political organization are not coming to us if we stand off and say that we are afraid of the dirt and filth of politics. We don't deserve that they should. We must teach the children that they must undergo a certain amount of moral risk in fulfilling their civic duties, but that they must not on this account hold aloof."

Stella Quarterly Meeting was held at Cleo the 2d, 3d and 4th inst. The visiting ministers were Achsah Kenyon, of Lowell, Kan., and George M. Fortune, of Stark, Kan. The Methodists were holding a series of meetings in Cleo at the same time, and their evangelist attended the meetings and spoke to the edification of all. Sixth-day evening was devoted to missionary work. Josiah Dillon, who soon leaves for Alaska, spoke with power; a subscription of $112 was taken for the Alaskan work. Seventh-day morning A. Kenyon gave a very forcible lesson from Col. 3. The business meeting was full of interest, and adjourned to meet at Alva in Third month. In the evening George M. Fortune spoke from Heb. 11. According to a regular custom of the Quarterly Meeting, the Bible School was held at 9 o'clock, Sabbath morning, followed at 10 by a meeting for worship. Many offered vocal prayer, and G. M. Fortune, A. Kenyon and J. Dillon spoke on consecration. This subject deeply moved some, and a number felt moved to give for Alaska mission work. Sabbath evening Reuben Riggs, who has recently located in the Quarterly Meeting as pastor at Liberty, spoke on the power of a mother's influence. G. M. Fortune followed with an earnest exhortation, which deeply moved his hearers. A series of meetings follows the Quarterly Meeting, conducted by A. Kenyon and G. M. Fortune.

Rose Hill Quarterly Meeting was held at Argonia, Kan., the 3d inst. No visiting ministers were present; and on account of two revivals, one at Friends' University and one at East Side Meeting, Wichita, some who are usually in attendance failed to be present. In the Meeting for Ministry and Oversight, Josiah Butler, Yearly Meeting Superintendent; Prof. J. Edwin Jay, and others gave valuable advice and counsel. J. Edwin Jay was appointed clerk, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Ezra Spencer. On Seventh-day, Professor Jay preached acceptably from Rom. 11: 17-21. The temperance session was held Sixth-day evening, as usual; addressed by Alvin J. George. The missionary meeting on Seventh-day evening was a profitable session, though no program had been prearranged. The business of the church was transacted in harmony. A minute given by Friends' University Monthly Meeting to President E. Stanley for religious service in connection with his work in the East in the interests of the school was unanimously approved, and the clerks were directed to endorse it on behalf of the meeting. The meeting on First-day morning was addressed by Edward C. Cook, and the Christian Endeavor Union had charge of the evening service. Daniel S. Pickett, superintendent of Evangelistic Work in Rose Hill Quarterly Meeting (Kansas) reports the following: Revival services have been held at Argonia by Franklin and Mary Moon Merideth; at Wichita, East Side, by Fred. Coppock; at the University, by Mahlon Perry; at Hilsdale, Harper Co., a new point, by Susie Allen. Abel J. Bond will conduct the revival at Greencastle and J. W. Wilmore at Rose Hill. Statistical reports are not in yet.

MARRIED.

MYRICK—HARRISON.—On Third-day evening, the twentieth of Twelfth month, 1904, at 6 o'clock, at the Yearly Meeting-house, Richmond, Ind., Miriam A. Harrison and Stephen Stanton Myrick.

TOMLINSON—JENKINS.—At Lucas Avenue Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Mo., Ninth month 12th, 1904, Allen U. Tomlinson and Sarah Katherine Jenkins.

DIED.

DENNIS.—At his home near Hagerstown, Ind., Twelfth month 1st, 1904, Wilson Dennis, in his 91st year. The deceased was a native of North Carolina, a birthright Friend and a loyal Christian.

ROBBINS.—At the home of her brother-in-law, Theodore H. Gardner, Newberg, Ore., Eleventh month 22d, 1904, Ellen, eldest daughter of John and Sarah Hanson, and wife of C. W. Patty, later of I. H. Robbins, in her 51st year. The deceased was a native of Indiana, a birthright Friend and an earnest Christian.

THOMPSON.—At his home, Emporia, Kan., Seventh month 31st, 1904, Thomas A. Thompson, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Thompson, of North Carolina, aged 82 years. The deceased was an esteemed citizen in the community and a beloved elder in the meeting.

The decision of the Post Office Department's legal advisers, that newspapers which either promote or advertise prize guessing contests, come under the ban of the law forbidding lotteries and aid to them by our postal service, will hit not a few of the leading dailies of the country and some religious weeklies. The decision will be indorsed by the public and by the best journalism of the country.

It is reported that flour millers are to some extent buying American grain abroad and having it shipped back to this country. One case is mentioned of the purchase of 40,000 bushels of American wheat, now at Antwerp, for return to the United States. It was exported from the Pacific Coast, and will in effect have made a voyage nearly around the world by the time it gets to the flouring mill in this country.

The new states that are to be formed out of the remaining contiguous territories are to have the privilege, it appears, of deciding for themselves whether they will or will not have woman suffrage. The Senate Committee on Territories could not stand the bombardment from countless women's clubs and organizations throughout the country. This is one example of the effectiveness of public opinion expressed through the letter-box.

The International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, which has the oversight of the associations in North America, gives some astonishingly large figures in its review of the year's work. The associations now number 1,815, their membership is 373,502, and their receipts and expenditures in the year balanced at $3,856,328. There has been a large extension of organizations in the United States and Canadian Territories, and the railroad associations now number 70,000 members.

The Supreme Court of the United States at Washington this week decided the case of the Western Union Telegraph Company against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, involving the right of the railroad company to remove the telegraph company's poles from its right of way. The opinion was handed down by Justice McKenna. In the decision the court held that the Congressional Act of 1866, which controlled in the case, does not grant eminent domain to telegraph companies over the private property of railroad companies.

There is no longer any doubt that the Russian Government intends to commit itself to very extensive reforms as the result of the liberal agitation begun when Prince Mirsky made his advent as Minister of the Interior. The Zemstvoist demands for a direct representative body to make the laws of the nation will not be granted, but some medium in the form of a representative consultative body, which can voice the wishes of the people direct to the sovereign, now seems the probable outcome. An entirely new law for the liberalization of the press also is apparently certain.

Every sensible person will approve when he notes that such great colleges as the University of Pennsylvania, Princeton and Cornell are taking a decided stand against hazing, and exacting a pledge from every student that matriculates that he will be guilty of no interference with the personal liberty of any student. As we happen to know, there is room for reform as to this vice, even in our many smaller colleges. Recently Chancellor Day spoke to the students of Syracuse University on the subject, and declared that hazing would be stopped, even if the attendance was cut in two thereby. That was bravely said, and ought to be efficient.

It is unsafe at this stage of the case to make definite statements about the operations of Cassie L. Chadwick in the financial world. It seems that through bogus and forged securities she succeeded in raising millions of dollars from banking institutions throughout the country. We would have supposed that any banker would know that a man possessing the vast wealth of Andrew Carnegie would have no need to give notes bearing interest. It is said that the woman's defence will be insanity; but this seems as flimsy as the securities she gave. If any insanity was displayed in these financial transactions it was by the bank cashiers and presidents who seemed to insanely desire to lavish wealth upon her and to give her whatsoever she asked.

The Scotch Church case is proceeding with something of the irresistibility and the destructiveness of a glacier. The Free Church has taken possession of the New College or theological seminary in Edinburgh and opened it with eight students, five of whom were brought over from Ireland. The United Free Church proposes to surrender at once all the general property of the Church, including the Glasgow and Aberdeen Colleges, the normal schools and the missions, the Assembly building, and certain churches numbering about twenty. The Free Church wished the United Free Church to keep much of this property subject to certain conditions as to what should be

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purposes.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

The Japanese reserves, for a long time in the field, are drawn from the active producing classes. They are men with many dependent upon them for support, and in the recent engagements they have been killed or disabled by the thousand, leaving their families utterly helpless. "The worst feature of it," says E. Warren Clark, treasurer of the Young People's Relief Fund, which is at the head of the new subscription movement, "is that these people suffer in silence; they will endure death itself rather than complain. My advices of recent date are that suffering and privation are widespread. In the town of Sendai, a place, I suppose, of some 60,000 inhabitants, there were 2,000 families made destitute by the war. The same proportion holds good all over the country. No matter how great the exertions of the Japanese charitable societies and the Japanese authorities, it is impossible to keep up with this rising tide of misery."

WRONG IDEA.

Don't get the wrong idea into your head that starvation is good for dyspepsia.

It's not.

Those who have not studied the subject very deeply, or with trained scientific minds, might think so.

But facts prove otherwise.

All specialists in stomach and digestive disorders know that it is best for dyspepsia to be well fed.

Why, dyspepsia is really a starvation disease!

Your food doesn't feed you.

By starvation, you may give your bowels and kidneys less to do, but that does not cure your digestive trouble—simply makes you weaker and sicker; less likely to be permanently cured than ever.

No, the only right way to permanently cure yourself of any form of dyspepsia or indigestive trouble, is to eat heartily of all the food that you find best agrees with you, and help your digestion to work with Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

This is a safe, certain, scientific, reliable method of treatment, which will never fail to cure the most obstinate cases if persevered in.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have a gentle, tonic, refreshing effect on the secretory glands of the entire digestive tract.

They gently force the flow of fresh digestive juices.

They contain, themselves, many of the chemical constituents of these juices, thus when dissolved they help to dissolve the food around them in stomach or bowels.

They therefore quickly relieve all the symptoms of indigestion, and coax the glands to take a proper pleasure in doing their proper work.

They coax you back to health.

No other medical treatment of any sort nor any fad system of "Culture" or "Cure," will give you the solid, permanent, curative results that will Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

WHAT'S THE USE?

What's the use o' growin' up?
You can't paddle with your toes
In a puddle; you can't yell
When you're feelin' extra well;
Why, every feller knows
A grown-up can't let loose.
I don't want to be no older—
What's the use?

What's the use o' growin' up?
When I'm big I don't suppose
Explorin' would be right
In a neighbor's field at night—
I won't like to get my clo'es
All watermelon juice.
I don't want to be no older—
What's the use?

What's the use o' growin' up?
You couldn't ride the cow,
An' the rabbits an' the pig
Don't like you 'cause you're big.
I'm comfortestest now;
Pr'aps I am a goose:
I don't want to be no older—
What's the use?

What's the use o' growin' up?
When yer growded, why, every day
You just have to be one thing.
I'm a pirate, er a king,
Er a cowboy—I can play
That I'm anything I choose.
I don't want to be no older—
What's the use?

JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

JUST ISSUED FROM THE PRESS OF THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO.

HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE

Told for Young and Old

By JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

Regular Contributor of Notes on Lessons in "Sunday-School Times," and Author of "Revised Normal Lessons," "Studies in Old Testament History,"

"Studies in the Four Gospels," Etc., Etc.

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presbyt'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine."

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminent a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

By special arrangement we are permitted to offer this book with One Year's Subscription to The American Friend for the Price of the Book Alone, $2.50. (ADD 35 CENTS FOR EXPRESSAGE.)

I ENVY NOT.

I envy not in any moods
The captive void of noble rage,
The linnet born within the cage,
That never knew the summer woods;

I envy not the beast that takes
His license in the field of time,
Unfetter'd by the sense of crime,
To whom a conscience never wakes;

Nor, what may count itself as blest,
The heart that never plighted troth,
But stagnates in the weeds of sloth;
Nor any want-begotten rest

I hold it true, whate'er befall;
I feel it, when I sorrow most;
'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all.

The Mind of Whittier

A Study of his Fundamental Religious Ideas

BY

Chauncey J. Hawkins

12mo, 80 cents net By mail, 89 cents

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

CHRIST IN THE SOUL.

WHEN therefore the first spark of a desire after God arises in thy soul, cherish it with all thy care, give all thy heart into it; it is nothing less than a touch of the divine loadstone, that is to draw thee out of the vanity of time, into the riches of eternity. Get up therefore, and follow it as gladly as the wise men of the east followed the star from heaven that appeared to them. It will do for thee as the star did for them, it will lead thee to the birth of Jesus, not in a stable at Bethlehem in Judea, but to the birth of Jesus in the dark centre of thine own soul.

George Fox: An Autobiography

THE STORY OF HIS LIFE TOLD IN SELECTED PASSAGES FROM HIS JOURNAL

Edited by RUFUS M. JONES

Professor of Philosophy in Haverford College and Editor of The American Friend

THE readable and understandable edition of George Fox's Journal, and undoubtedly destined to remain the standard edition. It is also practically the complete edition, though not formally so, for every occurrence of importance is included, and in place of the long papers on controversial religious subjects (which few now read and which none but special students of the subject can read understandingly), an Introduction and series of notes are given which put the reader into Fox's standpoint and into the feeling of the times.

George Fox's life was a thrilling and marvelous one, full of exciting episodes. His activity changed the map of the globe and the history of all nations. Every educated man should feel an obligation to understand the broad results of his work, and every Friend is under a double obligation to know not only these results, but the secret sources thereof.

POEM*

BY FRANCIS B. GUMMERE.

I.

Song calls for heroes, bids the thunder chime
Subservient rhythm, and on a cloud of need,
That frowns its wrath over some perilous time,
Writes in swift lightning runes of noble deed.
Song throbs to the indomitable heart
Of martyred Sidney, and the word he sped
When his grim headsman, loath to play the part,
Held back the axe, bent o'er the block, and said,— Missing the message men give ere they die,
"Wilt speak? Wilt stand? Wilt rise again?" But like Arrow or levin came the stern reply:
"Not till the general resurrection! Strike."
Song haunts old palaces, cathedral choirs,
Majestic ruins, mountain crags, the dome
Of sunset vista, and where beacon-fires
Leap from their cliffs and red the tumbling foam.
Song haunts the solitudes of glorious death,
As where, from barren hills to barren waves,
The heart of Scotland sighs and Scotland's breath
Moans dirges o'er the covenanters' graves.

II.

What, then, have we to win the grace of song?
What deed, what passionate word, what storm of tears,
What joy exultant flashes out along
The dim procession of our silent years?
What champions greet us from that petty strife,
Trim heroes of the basket and the store?
What solitude, what majesty of life,
In this mid-city's dull and futile roar?
And here! Vain quest for organ-music streaming
With the long chant, for carved and vaulted fane,
For marbled memories and legends gleaming
Purple and crimson from the sun-flushed pane!
No chapel solitudes; no mourners kneeling
With sigh and tear before that piteous form,
To hear His voice of consolation stealing
As once upon the Galilean storm. . . .

III.

House of our fathers, and have these thy walls
No word of answer for the singer's quest,
No sudden, spirit-traced memorials
Of lives that peered the bravest and the best?
Of struggles in the wilderness; the word
Of courage flashed from clash of doubt and faith;
The cry of agony; the whispers heard
From souls triumphant in the gates of death?
And we, shall we who hold thy memory dear,
And praise our heritage, and round thee throng,
Tune no brave chorus for thy hundredth year,
Compel no paean on the lips of song?
Nay. Song for thee has no insistent strain,
And writes no epic of thy fates. A thrill
Of deeper harmony shall make us fain
To stand before thee reverent and still,—
As mountaineers, once gained their cloud-girt islands,
Above the mists, above the broken light,
Take into deeps of silence out of silence
The ministrations of the infinite.

WHAT CAME NINETEEN HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

IT IS PERFECTLY right in these Christmas days to make much of the homely scenes at Bethlehem—the stable and the manger, the poor parents and the tiny child. It is right, too, to tell again and again, as we do, the story of "wise men" following a star from the East, and of rustic shepherds waking from their sleep among the sheep to hear the song of peace and good-will. It does us good to go back once a year to the simple beginnings of this marvelous life and to stand, with those primitive wise men, around the cradle of a little child. God's revelations all begin at some minute point and open out upon us more or less gradually; and here, too, the Gospel story conforms to the universal order.

But may it not be well to ask, in these days set apart to commemorate the birth and babyhood, what the LIFE means to our world? What came to us in this person who was named "Jesus" in those first days of life?

The mystery about the birth of an ordinary person is so great, the difficulty of explaining how self-consciousness and will ever begin is so beyond us, that nobody can hope to tear away the veil from the mystery of an Incarnation—even if he wanted to do it. We may well leave the mystery untouched, but there are a few clear facts about that life which ought to be plain to every wayfaring man.

1. It was unique in its sinlessness. With all the rest of us, He shared the assaults of temptation. Suggestions of the lower ways of living swept across the threshold of His thought. They never reached the citadel of His will. He never had to look back on moral failure. He never had to repent. He never had that consciousness, so common to us, when the inward voice says, "I have sinned." The black lines were never painted on the white background of His life. The dark tents were never pitched within the pure enclosure of His conscious life.

2. He was unique in the completeness of His humanity. He called Himself by preference Son of man. A striking sentence in John says: "He knew what was in man." He felt Himself a type and goal of human life. To all persons who ask Him for the way of life, He answers, "Follow me,—"I am the way." To those who are weary and heavy laden, He says, "Take my yoke, learn of me," i. e., do your work and bear your burdens the way I do mine. The supreme call to man is found in those farewell words: "You are to love even as I have loved you."

3. He was absolutely unique in His oneness with God. Many human souls have reached a stage where they have felt joined to the Lord in one spirit. He seems always to have had this experience, except in one solitary moment of anguish, when He was treading the winepress alone. He speaks as though no gap severed Him from the Infinite Life. "If you see me, you see the Father;" "I and the Father are one." "The Father worketh in me." "No man knoweth the Father save the Son." This union was no rare and momentary attainment. It was the fundamental characteristic of His whole earthly life so far as our record tells that life. In a word, He is a revelation of God. For the first time men were able to learn that God is love, and spirit, and light, and truth.

4. He is finally unique in His saving power. "He shall be called Jesus, because He shall save men from their sins." He abolished sacrifices by self-sacrifice. He took away fear and terror by revealing love. He put a Father in the place which had been occupied by a stern Sovereign. He made divine Grace, once for all, vocal and real as the central fact of the universe. He suffered on a cross at the hands of men who could not understand Him, but He carried up with Him the heart strings of the world and He has ever since drawn men unto Himself, and He ever will do so, as long as men have hearts to feel the sway of love and the power of sacrifice.

QUAKER IDEALS AND "FRENZIED FINANCE."

A FEW WEEKS ago a professor of economics in a great German university was in this country getting material for a new book. He had come to the conclusion in his own mind that Friends had played a great part in forming modern business methods and business ideals. He was, especially, searching for historical material to prove that Friends were the first people to establish the "one price" idea, i. e., the first to charge exactly what a piece of goods was worth, regardless of who came to buy it, and he believed that their success through the simple adherence to honesty and fairness had set the standard for business methods in general.

There is considerable historical ground for this view, though of course many other great influences were at work to produce the changes which were wrought in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. But of one fact there can be no question: From his earliest moment of consciousness, the Quaker child, at least in the past, has had the importance of truth, honesty and squareness so impressed upon him that he learned these traits as soon as he learned to count and to say his a b c's.

As soon as he had backbone enough to sit upright on a seat and hold his head perpendicular he would begin to go to monthly meeting. He would hear in the solemn assembly the voice of the clerk reading the "advice": "It is advised, that none launch into trading or worldly business, beyond what they can manage honorably and with reputation, so that they may keep their words with all men, that their yea may prove yea indeed and the nay, nay." He would hear over and over the searching "query," "Are Friends careful to inspect their affairs and settle their accounts? Are they punctual to their promises, and just in the payment of their debts, and careful to live within the bounds of their circumstances?" Now one reading of these words or one hearing of them might leave a little fellow much as he was before, but if he heard them constantly reiterated through the entire formative period of his life, and coming with the sanction and authority of a great religious body behind them, they would eventually become a part of his "moral and social structure," and they would gather the power of an inward habit. It has always been the Quaker ideal to produce men, and women too, with this inward moral structure—persons who would be honest and square, even without stopping to think. In so far as this work has been actually done, Friends have rendered modern society an inestimable service. There are few greater contrasts than that between the kind of business life which the Quaker ideal has pointed toward and that which is now being described under the title of "frenzied finance." Fortunately this lurid picture of reckless money-getting is true of only a small number of the business men of America. The great rank and file of men who are doing business are seeking only what properly belongs to them, but never perhaps were the dangers and temptations of winning "easy money" by crooked methods greater. Consequently never was there greater need of men who have formed the habit of strict integrity and of unhesitating honesty. Let Friends realize that this ideal which was good enough for grandfather is good enough for this rapid age.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

The Anti-Saloon League of Pennsylvania is hard at work trying to secure a State Local Option Law this winter. At present every person in the state is more or less at the mercy of the saloon, which has enormous political power back of it. This law would at least give the townships of this great state a chance to secure prohibition. Limited prohibition is, of course, only a partial cure of the disease, but it would be such a gain that those of us who now feel the hopelessness of attacking the saloon power of Pennsylvania would thank God and take courage if we could see this weapon in the hands of the people.

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Classical Echoes in Tennyson," by Dr. Wilfred P. Mustard.

This little book of 162 pages by Dr. Mustard, professor of Latin in Haverford College, is a work which stands alone in its field. Many of the classical allusions in Tennyson have been traced back to their sources by earlier students, but nobody before has covered the ground with anything like the same completeness. No less than sixty-one passages are cited from the "Princess" alone, and one discovers as he reads that every line of Tennyson has been scrutinized with a keen eye for any hint of a reference to a classical writer. One hardly knows whether to wonder more at the author's familiarity with the entire body of Tennyson's poems or at his easy command of the old masters whose "golden dust" sparkles in all that the great Laureate wrote. This book will be a valuable companion both to the lover of the classics and to the lover of Tennyson.

"Hurlburt's Story of the Bible."

The best stories in the world for the youthful mind are to be found in the Bible. These stories possess all the qualities that are essential to stories which are to be used for developing interest, imagination, love of beauty, love of truth, love of the wonderful, as well as for forming religious conceptions and religious feeling.

It is by no means settled whether the child had better go to the Bible itself to read these stories, or whether he will get on better by having them told to him in modern story-language. There is something to be said for both views, and it probably depends a good deal on the child himself. But it is unmistakable that there will always be a place for a good "story of the Bible." There have been some extremely poor ones produced, and it is doubtful if there is a much harder literary task than to make a thoroughly satisfactory "story of the Bible," i. e., one that does not offend at some point.

Dr. Hurlburt's book, which we are offering as a premium with THE AMERICAN FRIEND, is the most complete and on the whole the most satisfactory attempt we have yet seen to produce an interesting and informing book of Bible stories. It covers the entire Scriptures and brings out all the incidents which are capable of forming the nucleus of a story. It is reverent and lofty in its tone, simple and straightforward in its language, and it will make the famous characters of the Bible very real to its readers. It is profusely illustrated with carefully selected pictures.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

OUR COMFORTER.

BY EDWARD JUDSON.

Jesus promised His disciples that after His bodily presence had been withdrawn from the world, He would return and dwell, as a Spirit, in the heart of Christians. This is the Real Presence. Christ is just as truly with us as with the disciples on the shore of the Lake of Galilee. If our eyes were loosed from flesh we should see Him, as they did. Lo, I am with you alway. I will not leave you orphans: I come unto you. He is a kind of guardian angel; as if a mother's spirit could return and hover about the pathway of her little child. The Holy Spirit is Christ Himself spiritually present to the believer.

The Holy Spirit is recognized in all the creeds of Christendom; as in the Anglican Confession: I believe in the Holy Ghost; also: O God the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son; have mercy upon us miserable sinners; and in the Westminster Shorter Catechism: We are made partakers of the redemption purchased by Christ, by the effectual application of it to us by the Holy Spirit; and in the Baptist Manual: We believe that Sanctification is carried on in the hearts of believers by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, the Sealer and Comforter.

God the Father is the statement of God's relation to the universe at large; God the Son is the statement of His relation to human history; and God the Spirit is the statement of His relation to the spirit of man. Our higher nature, that in us that differentiates us from the lower animals is the sphere of the operation of the Holy Spirit. All our moral and religious life, from its first beginning to its fullest development, is dependent upon God the Spirit. Through the Spirit we are born again. The Spirit sanctifies us, conforming us to the image of Christ. The Spirit teaches us how to pray. The desire in all true prayer originates in God, and, coming down into our hearts, goes back to Him like a resurgent tide.

Too full for sound and foam,

When that which drew from out the boundless deep Turns again home.

The Christian's power flows from conscious dependence upon the Holy Spirit who reconciles him to God and conforms him to Christ, and leads him in the path of Christ's teachings, and confronts him in weakness and pain. There is no equipment for service except through the Spirit. To one is given through the Spirit the word of wisdom, and to another the word of knowledge according to the same Spirit. In recognition of the Spirit's presence there is power. We should always look to Him when we come together to pray, and note His absence at the church service with at least as much concern as we would note the absence of the minister or the sexton or any of our fellow Christians. Two or three with the Spirit constitutes a quorum. We should no more think of going on with the meeting without the consciousness of His presence than we would think of sharing in the pleasures of a reception without first paying our respects to the host.

Christian people are coming to know this divine Presence better, but they are very slow to relinquish the notion that the strong impressions which they have proceed directly from God. They like to put the impress of a divine sanction upon their impulses. They say, "God told me to do this or that." But how are we to know whether such impulses are the voice of the Spirit or of our own inner self? The Spirit influences us beneath our consciousness, in what is sometimes called the subliminal self.

A company of travelers were once off the coast of Ceylon, the wind blowing shoreward. As they conversed together on the deck a sailor smeared with oil of cinnamon and cloves a part of the sail just to the windward of them. This made them think that they were smelling the "spicy breezes" that Blow soft o'er Ceylon's Isle.

It was only afterwards that they learned that the pleasant fragrance proceeded from their own ship. We may mistake the exhalations of our own nature for the breath of Heaven.

The Christian is led by the Spirit, but not in a mechanical way that gratifies our indolence. The Spirit makes the Scriptures luminous to our dim eyes. The Spirit appeals to our intelligence. He brings to our remembrance what Jesus said. We are not towed over the ocean from port to port, but are taught by the Spirit to use the Bible chart ourselves. There is no true art but requires mental effort. People nowadays want an easy going religion. It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem. (1 Kings 12: 28). They like to sing cheap and sensational music—the kind which sings itself and neither profits us nor honors God. In following the Spirit our best intelligence is brought into strenuous action.

New York.

I fear that when we indulge ourselves in the amusement of going without a religion, we are not, perhaps, aware how much we are sustained by an enormous mass all about us of religious feeling and religious conviction, so that, whatever it may be safe for us to think—for us who have had great advantages, and have been brought up in such a way that a certain moral direction has been given to our character—I do not know what would become of the less favored classes of mankind if they undertook to play the same game.—James Russell Lowell.

THE CONTINUOUS LEADERSHIP OF THE SPIRIT.*

BY AMORY H. BRADFORD.

The seat of authority in religion is where the old Puritans always insisted it was to be found, in the spirit of man illuminated by the Spirit of God. The ultimate authority is within. The Church is not final unless it clearly expresses the divine will, and each individual must decide for himself whether it does so. The Bible is regarded as the Word of God because it meets this spiritual test. The creeds, ancient and modern, command assent in so far, and no farther, as they correspond with the ideals of truth which are in every man. There is no escape from this position. It is not rationalism; it is recognition of our dependence upon the Spirit promised by Jesus. This is the very quintessence of Puritanism, which began by affirming that every man may come into the immediate presence of the Almighty and that He alone is Lord of the intellect and conscience. What is true? You will find your answer in that silence where the Spirit of God bears witness with your own spirit, and nowhere else. To that bar the creeds, the church, the customs of the time and even the Bible itself always have been and always must be brought. All that shines true in the inward light will endure and all else will perish. The court of final appeal is to the God who dwells within every man; who speaks in every soul; whose judgments, if they were heeded, would leave no one in doubt as to truth or duty. This message needs peculiar emphasis now. Men are asked to accept teaching which violates reason and their moral sense. They wish to be loyal to truth, but they do not altogether believe the creeds to which they are asked to subscribe. They know themselves to be religious and need the help of the church; shall they be excluded and told that they are false to God because they are true to themselves? Rather let us insist that no one who is true to himself can be false to God. Let us preach the duty of loyalty to the inner light. Let us say, what most of us believe, that in the last analysis, each man, after having submitted himself to divine guidance, must decide for himself what is true and what is right. This is the fundamental doctrine of Protestantism and of Puritanism. Is that saying that each man must be a law unto himself? It is saying, rather, that the divine life in humanity will manifest itself through each man's individuality, and that God may be trusted whether he speaks in the silence as to Elijah, or whether he reveals himself through the consecrated scholarship and holy endeavors of men of the twentieth century of the Christian era.

The continuous leadership of the Spirit necessitates frequent changes in creedal statements. It makes absurd the idea of a creed as a finality. A creed is a statement of what a body of Christians believe. Creeds ought to be adjusted to the governing thought of the age. For centuries after Christ theological thinking was in the terms of Roman law; but now it is in terms of life. Law was once an arbitrary command, with a penalty attached to it; it now suggests the observed order of vital movements. Salvation was once regarded as escape from penalty; now it is regarded as relief from the consequences which follow a violation of nature. The ideas are not contradictory, but they are pervading the universe; but in the time in which the early creeds were written the conception of the universe did not exist. One of the weaknesses of the modern pulpit is the fact that so many ministers still preach in terms of statute law, while the more intelligent of their people are thinking in the terms of life. The Spirit of God inspires the scientist, and his discoveries modify theological thinking. If we must have formulas of faith let them be written in intelligible language. If this were done now nearly all our present denominations would cease to be, for they are largely survivals of controversies which could not arise to-day. Who shall put into reverent words the beliefs of our most spiritual men? Who shall write the new creed? It ought to be written. A Person pervades and transcends the universe; he may be interpreted in terms of fatherhood; he is truly revealed in Jesus, the Christ; history is the progressive realization of the divine ideal for humanity; God's will for man may be found in every human soul, and all should dare to read and trust what is written there. Happiness and blessing follow obedience to the law of God, and misery its disobedience; death is but a change in the mode of existence. Some time all men by God's unmerited grace as revealed in the Gospel will reach the stature of the fullness of Christ; the Kingdom of God will fill the earth. Along some such lines as these it seems to me the creed for to-day should be written, but no man can tell the terms or the language in which it should be written to-morrow.

With all humility, however, I venture to suggest that there is one article in the creed of the ages which will require little change, and that article is this: I believe in the continuous leadership of the Spirit of God.

The leadership of the Spirit has brought into clear relief the sin of a divided Christendom. Differences concerning doctrine ought not to separate Christians into rival camps. The things which should unite are more important than those which divide.

The church will always be composed of individuals with distinguishing characteristics. If church union implies that all should be required to accept the same creed, or to worship according to the same rubrics, it would be both impossible and undesirable. Creeds and liturgies will always differ as men differ. But such differences do not prevent Calvinists and Arminians, liberals and conservatives, Baptists and Quakers, orthodox and heterodox from working together in the state, and they ought not to do so in the church. The one is no holier than the other.

THE MYSTERY OF SUFFERING.

BY GEORGE FREEMAN.

I have four or five reasons to give why there must be suffering or pain in this world. The first is: It must be a necessity as far as God is concerned. It may help some suffering one if you are led to see the truth of that. Let me put it in some figure if I can. Men and women must endure suffering if God is to reveal Himself to them as their Creator, as their Benefactor, as their Ruler. That is to say, God could not have given us this beautiful sunshine to-day if He had not before given us the darkness of night. We could not have had the one without the other, and if you and I did not have pain we should be lumps of wood and bits of chalk, instead of men and women. It is a necessity to our very nature, because the law of the whole thing is this—to the measure of a man's power to endure pain to that measure he can endure joy and happiness. I know that there may be a physiological law behind that explanation. But there are some people so roughly built that they can scarcely feel pain.

I say again it is a necessity to your nature, and the finer your nature the more sensibility to pain. If you hop, skip and jump with a toothache, be thankful you have a system that is sensitive, refined, well born. But God must allow us to have pain or we should have no understanding that we were of a superior creation to the rest of the great world He has made.

Next, do you know that it is the law of growth that we have to grow upon the principle of pain? No one here has grown on any other principle than that, and if you had not suffered pain you would have been stunted, you would have been dwarfed instead of being grown men and women. Let me give you a familiar illustration. Here is a little child that just leaves its mother's or nurse's arms. That little child has got to begin to walk. And how does the child begin to walk? That little child learns to walk by tumbling about. If the little one knocks its poor little head on a chair it gives it pain and the little one learns not to knock its head against the chair again. We have had to suffer for our mistakes; we have had to be trained; we have had to be disciplined by certain laws that we cannot defy, and you and I have had to grow. "It was good for me," says one, "that I was afflicted." Another time he said, "Before I was afflicted (or before I was in pain) I went astray." Even Christ, the Captain of our salvation, was made perfect by suffering; surely we are not to understand by that that Christ's nature was imperfect, but Christ's nature was developed. Show me the man or woman who has not had pain or suffering and distress in this world and I will show you the individual that has no manliness, no character, no strength. It was the one who has endured (as seeing Him who is invisible) that is the one who has found character and strength and power.

Will you remember, too, that pain and pleasure just alternate one with the other in making the best combination for discipline that it is possible for anybody to know, and therefore human life, I would almost say, would be robbed of its romance, certainly of its sentiment, if this were not true, and what the world would do I cannot think. All branches of knowledge have to exist upon this law.

Will you think, too, that the law of compensation is always at work where there is suffering and where there is pain? One writer wrote that "Ignorance was bliss, and therefore it was folly to be wise." Well, there is a measure of truth in that, but on the other hand it is true enough to life that there is a compensation to wisdom that pays for displacing the folly of ignorance. Of course, I don't believe it myself, but some would have us believe that there is no such thing as pain. I know very well there is, and if you give any of these gentlemen a toothache they will find out that there is pain, but I know what they mean—pain, after all, is a conception of the mind.

"Then the Spirit of God took Christ into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil," to be put to pain. Would it not have been wiser to have saved Christ from that awful temptation? It would in our poor way of calculation, but not for the human race. Ask the poor tempted man this morning what he could do to comfort himself if he could not look to a strong Lord and Saviour who had been tempted in all points like as he was, yet without sin. Through pain, through conflict, through agony was Jesus Christ made perfect and you and I may have to endure things if we would develop knowledge, but it is worth the endurance, because we rise to a higher point of pleasure than otherwise we could reach. I know the penalty of it is there as well, but the compensation is not far off. In the school of trouble there is a beautiful compensation always to repay you. If God takes one faculty away from you, He increases the power.

Don't think I am trying to make God out to be a God of cruelty. I preach what I believe Him to be, a God of profound mystery, but in all the darkness of the mystery there is the clear shining fact that God is all the while working good, especially to those who love Him.

I think I may say again that suffering is not to be discountenanced, but to be valued, because it always produces the richest and the noblest characters. In any branch of life we can prove that to a demonstration, but if we take some great achievements of men, we find that there is this consensus of opinion that sorrow and suffering produce the greatest energy of endurance, by which are brought about the great and mighty achievements upon the battlefields or upon the troubled waters by naval ships. Was it not Byron who wrote

The soldier braves death for the fanciful wreath,
In honor's romantic career,
But he raises the foe
When in battle laid low,
And bathes every wound with a tear.

Thank God for Byron's idea, that although the soldier goes forth for his richly deserved wreath of fame and rushes down some dangerous hill to fell the foe to a violent death he becomes nobler, more martyrlike, more instinct with manhood when his tear falls on the wounds of the man he has laid low, teaching us this, that there is no service so noble, that there is no effort so angelic, as that which is associated with the alleviation of distress.

If you just apply this little plain talk to your own dealings with men and women you will find the truth of the poet who says that "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." Some of us have passed through certain sorrows that we cannot speak about until we can find somebody who has passed through exactly that sorrow. Until you have lost a little child do not be foolish enough to try to cheer and comfort somebody else. If you have not lost a husband you cannot understand what widowhood means. If you have not lost your parents you do not know how awful it is. You have got to go through it in order to know it, and out of every sorrow there comes sympathy.

Suffering brings the choicest refinements that human nature or human life can ever possibly know. If I could take you into some house, where they are celebrating some festal season, a wedding or a child's birth, so that the whole house is aglow with merriment and music.—Nothing wrong about it.—Everything right and pleasant and happy, but suddenly there comes the news that a little child is ill in the house. What happens? Well, you would not dance, would you? You would not play; you would not sing. The house would be lifted up and elevated and refined by the little sufferer in the other room.

Ah, there is something majestic! I begin to see now why it was that God invented it. He knew how shallow we were, how un-Christlike, and therefore, God had to bring forth in the chemistry of His own infinite wisdom this divine, lofty plan for the purifying of men and women and for developing them, so that now it is true that we have got to have pain and we can say as one writer said long ago—

God had, one Son without sin,
But no Son without sorrow.

Can I apply this more plainly than this? If you do not have any trouble you are not a child of God. You say where is the authority for such an awful statement of fact? This is it: "He scourgeth all whom He receiveth." "He loveth all whom He chasteneth." But finish the passage, "If ye be without chastening ye are bastards and not sons." That is God Almighty's word. Comfort then; "Comfort ye my people, say unto them, Behold your God, and they shall be exalted."—The Baptist Commonwealth.

Blessed be Thy name forever,
Thou of life the guard and giver!
Thou who slumberest not nor sleepest,
Blest are they Thou kindly keepest!
God of stillness and of motion,
Of the rainbow and the ocean,
Of the mountain, rock and river,
Blessed be Thy name forever!

THE REFORM OF THOMAS.

Mrs. Niblick was skilled in a kind of marital alchemy, an art possessed by a few of her sex, by which Niblick's defects were converted into something like virtues. The Chicago News tells of this transformation, which was so easy that Niblick's family thought that it was spontaneous. As soon as the Niblicks returned from their honeymoon trip, Niblick's mother took the bride aside and spoke to her confidentially.

"Perhaps I should say nothing at all, my dear," she said, "but my motherly affection for Thomas doesn't blind me to his faults, and there's no doubt about it he's the most disorderly of men. I don't want to assume the attitude of an adviser, but if I were you I'd accept the fact philosophically, and not try to reform him. I've been trying to do that ever since he was able to run alone."

The bride looked thoughtful. "I'm glad you told me," she said. "I hadn't noticed that he was careless."

"He'll soon show it," said the mother.

Shortly after Niblick's carelessness began to manifest itself. He came in one evening and left his hat on the dining-room table. When he sat down to dinner the hat was still there, between the soup tureen and the fern dish. Mrs. Niblick, at her end of the table, looked sweetly unconscious of the odd decoration.

"Hello! What's my hat doing there?"

"I was wondering."

"I should think that girl would know enough to hang a man's hat up where it belongs!"

"I told her never to disturb any of your personal belongings, dear. Didn't you want it there?"

"I meant to hang it on the hall rack as I came in?"

"That does seem rather more suitable for it, doesn't it?"

Niblick laughed and hung up his hat. But when he changed his linen that evening to go out he tossed what he had discarded on the floor of his dressing-room. When, on the evening following, he found it in the same place he told his wife that the floor had not been swept."

"Certainly it has," said Mrs. Niblick. "Oh, is that why you thought so? How absurd! Have you never seen that hamper in the closet? That's for soiled clothes, dear."

Niblick picked up his things and threw them into the hamper.

After that a cigar stub remained a fixture on the library clock for two weeks before Niblick removed it. Meantime articles were accumulating on all sides—newspaper clippings, burned matches, torn envelopes, golf sticks, and so on. Finally, when his smoking-jacket was found only after a long search, Niblick declared that the domestic's ideas of tidying up were those of an idiot. "The apartment looks like a dump-heap," said he.

"There's a division in your closet for your smoking-jacket," said Mrs. Niblick, "but if you prefer to hang it on a door-knob I've nothing to say."

Niblick immediately owned that he was an untidy brute. "But why haven't you spoken to me about these things? I just forget, you know."

"You'll learn to remember, perhaps. You are systematic enough at your office."

"I have to be," said Niblick, ingenuously.

"As for speaking to you," said Mrs. Niblick, "your mother tried that for a number of years, I understand. But don't let that worry you, dear. You shall put your things exactly where you please. Only no one will pick them up after you."

Niblick is now learning fast.—Youth's Companion.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

LYDIA N. BLAIR.

BY L. L. HOBBS.

A wide circle of friends keenly feel the loss sustained by the death on the 14th of Eleventh month of Lydia N. Blair; especially did her death bring deep sorrow to a large number of young people in North Carolina, who had learned to love her as their teacher. Her devotion and skill as an instructor were very marked; and her deep interest in education, coupled with a readiness to bear the responsibility of a teacher's calling, clearly marked the great work of her life, and was at the bottom of the success which eminently crowned her efforts. No task was too great for her to undertake in behalf of young people, and she was always among them as one who served. Her long connection with the Faculty of Guilford College gave her a wide opportunity to manifest her deep sense of responsibility and at the same time to discharge her duty with a devotion rarely equaled, and seldom if ever surpassed.

Lydia N. Blair was born at Cambray, Canada, on the 1st of Sixth month, 1851. Her parents were Thomas and Mary Hoag Bowerman. Her mother was a member of the Hoag family of New England. She received her early educational training in the excellent schools of Canada, and subsequently, after a four years' course, graduated at Earlham College, where she afterwards served one year as teacher. She then taught five years in Pickering College, Canada. In 1884 she was married to Franklin S. Blair, of North Carolina, and removed to his home in Guilford County and joined him in an excellent school of which he was principal. She not only became thus actively engaged in teaching, but she also took largely upon herself the care and training of her husband's three children to whom she was tenderly devoted, and in turn was by them held in filial affection.

The last thirteen years of her life she spent at Guilford College, where her work as instructor was greatly appreciated by the Board of Trustees, other members of the Faculty, and by the students. She possessed a genius for teaching, and her zeal and delight in her work gave her great power over young people. Her rare sympathy and kindly interest in people made her life a blessing to any community in which she lived.

As a member of New Garden Monthly Meeting she was greatly beloved, and exhibited a tender regard for the welfare of the membership of the church and a warm interest in any work which was undertaken to extend the Kingdom of her Lord and Master. For the last ten years of her life she was an esteemed elder, and much used by the church, both in her own local meeting, and also in the Quarterly and in the Yearly Meeting. She was a member of Friends by birthright, and cherished throughout life a deep interest in the welfare of our branch of the church.

She was called from works to reward in what seemed the middle of a most useful life; yet her chief desire was to obey the voice of her Master, whether to stay and lend a hand to any in need, or to go and be forever with the Lord. By fidelity to duty, by keen insight into the trials and struggles of those around her, and by the sacrifice of self for the promotion of Christ's righteousness on earth, she impressed all who knew her as one who walked with God, and sought day by day to let her light so shine as to glorify her Father in Heaven.

The International Lesson.

FIRST QUARTER.

LESSON II.

FIRST MONTH 8, 1905.

THE WITNESS OF JOHN THE BAPTIST TO CHRIST.

John 1: 19-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.—John 1: 29.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, First mo. 2.—Witness of John the Baptist to Christ. John 1: 17-34
Third-day, First mo. 3.—John's humility. John 3: 23-36.
Fourth-day, First mo. 4.—John's message. Isa. 40: 3-11.
Fifth-day, First mo. 5.—Greater witness. John 5: 36-47.
Sixth-day, First mo. 6.—Preaching of Peter. Acts 2: 36-40.
Seventh-day, First mo. 7.—Baptized into Christ. Rom. 6: 3-11.
First-day, First mo. 8.—Added testimony. 2 Pet. 1: 16-21.

Time.—John the Baptist began to preach probably in the summer of A. D. 26, and had been preaching about six months when Jesus came to be baptized of him. The date of the present lesson was then probably early in A. D. 27. The visit of the Priests and Levites was several weeks later.

Place.—The scene of John's preaching was for the most part in the Wilderness of Judea, a sparsely inhabited district, west of the lower part of the Jordan and Dead Sea, but in the present lesson John appears to have been considerably north of the Wilderness of Judea.

Rulers.—Tiberius Cæsar, emperor of Rome; Pontius Pilate, governor of Judea; Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee.

John the Baptist is one of the most striking characters in the Bible; the testimony of Christ to him is a remarkable one, John 5: 35; he was "a burning and a shining light," but never seems to have understood the full significance of the Christ, though his testimony was so clear and strong.

19. "And this is the witness," R. V. "The Jews." In the Gospel of John the word "Jew" is used almost exclusively for inhabitants of Judea, and generally for those who opposed Christ. In this special place it means the Sanhedrim or official Council of the Jews. "Who art thou?" This did not mean his name, but his claims—they wished to know if he claimed to be the Messiah. Compare Luke 3: 15.

20. He absolutely disclaims any such notions.

21. "Art thou Elijah?" R. V. He also was expected to return about this time. Mal. 4: 5, 6. John's denial at first sight seems strange, when compared with Christ's statement that John was the Elijah spoken of by Malachi; the explanation is doubtless that John, who was very humble concerning himself, did not understand that he was the one foretold. "Art thou that prophet?" Doubtless referring to Deuteronomy 18: 15.

22. They were determined to get an answer.

23. John applies to himself the words of the prophet Isaiah (Isa. 40: 3). This passage was doubtless understood in a Messianic sense by the Jews. Compare Luke 3: 3-6. A herald who prepared the way for the approach of a monarch was a common thing in those days, and John declared he was performing a similar service for the Messiah.

24, 25. "And they had been sent from the Pharisees," R. V. The Pharisees set great store by ceremonies and especially by "washings." (Matt. 15: 2; Mark 7: 3.) They wish to know by what authority he performs baptism, a symbolic washing, if he is not "the Christ, neither Elijah, neither the prophet."

26, 27. "I baptize with water." The pronoun is emphatic as contrasted with "one." "With water." "The outward symbol of the real baptism that is not in my power." "In the midst of you standeth one whom ye know not, even he that cometh after me, the latchet of whose shoe I am not worthy to unloose," R. V. This rendering brings out the meaning better. It was a saying of the Jews, "Every service which a servant will perform for his master, a disciple will do for his Rabbi, except loosing his sandal thong." John did not consider himself fit to do even this.

28. "Bethabara." Better, as in R. V., "Bethany." This place was probably about fifteen miles south of the Sea of Galilee, and hence not far from Cana, which fits in well with John 2: 1.

29. "On the morrow," R. V. That is after the interview with the Pharisees. "Jesus coming." From the temptation. See Matt. 4: 1-11; Luke 4: 1-13, etc. "Behold the Lamb of God," etc. It is not positively clear where John got this title. Possibly from Isa. 53: 7; or Ex. 12: 21, etc., or both, or, as is more probable, John was inspired to proclaim a truth, the full meaning of which he did not comprehend himself. "Taketh away the sin of the world." Compare 1 Pet. 2: 24. "Sin." Not simply "sins," but sin in its unity. Compare 1 John 3: 5. "The world." All mankind. "Christ's redemption is not a limited one; it provides perfect salvation for the human race." The idea of sacrifice is inseparable from this passage. It is noteworthy that the word lamb, in the singular, is never used in the New Testament except in reference to Jesus Christ.

30. A repetition of verses 15 and 27.

31. "I knew him not." John seems to have no personal acquaintance with Christ, though here the reference is doubtless to knowledge of Jesus as the Messiah. John clearly states that his chief mission was to make known the Messiah to Israel, and that preaching repentance was part of this—it was a preparation for the coming of the Messiah.

32. "Bare witness," R. V. See Matt. 3: 16, 17; Mar 1: 9-11. "I have beheld the Spirit descending as a dove out of heaven," R. V. Compare Luke 3: 22. "It abode." The Spirit.

33. In some way it was made known to John that this was to be the sign by which he was to recognize the Messiah. "The same is he that baptized with the Holy Spirit," R. V. In contrast with John who baptized with water.

34. "And I have seen and have borne witness that this is the Son of God," R. V. Compare Matt. 3: 17.

Christian Endeavor.

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Lindley D. Clark, 1429 New York Ave., Washington, D. C.]

TOPIC FOR FIRST MONTH EIGHTH.

THE MAKING OF A CHRISTIAN: HIS BIRTH.

John 3: 1-8.

Second-day, First mo. 2.—The new birth is needful. Rom. 8: 1-9.

Third-day, First mo. 3.—It is complete. Ezek. 36: 25-31.

Fourth-day, First mo. 4.—It is by Christ. John 1: 1-13.

Fifth-day, First mo. 5.—Through the word. 1 Pet. 1: 18-23.

Sixth-day, First mo. 6.—Of the Spirit. Rom. 8: 10-17.

Seventh-day, First mo. 7.—We may know it. 1 John 3: 19-24.

In his little book, "The Spirit Filled Life," John MacNeil asks first of his reader, "Are you a B. A?" For to be born again is the starting-point, and by the new birth comes the right to the inheritance of all that God offers in Christ. The sum and boundary of this blessing is the Kingdom of God, and into this none can enter but by virtue of the claim of sonship. A man may purchase an estate or a rank; he may by study and application acquire an education, but he can become one of God's children only by believing on Christ.

We may or may not know when the definite act occurred by which we passed from death unto life, but we are assuredly able to know and it is our duty to know that it has occurred. It may have been preceded by a deep sense of sorrow and of separation from God, but these are not the new birth nor are they even repentance.

Repentance—change of purpose—there must be, and sorrow there will certainly be when we consider the days spent without regard to God's plans or our own best interests. But the essential and effectual condition is the fixed purpose to "trust and obey" that forms the vital connection between the human heart, touched by the Spirit, and the Power of God unto salvation. "Angels, looking at it from the heaven side, call it being born again. Men, looking at it from the earth side, call it trusting Jesus."

The old story of the sculptor who procured of the gods that they should impart life to the beautiful statue that he had carved is suggestive of our Lord's work in quickening into spiritual life the wonderful physical and intellectual mechanism which is His creation, but which, apart from the birth "from above" is not alive unto God.

The living thing demonstrates itself. When Zaccheus promised restitution and gave alms he left in the minds of his fellow citizens no doubt of his new birth. Nothing of the sort had ever happened before, and the cause of this new work was no less new and real than the work itself. Concern as to whether we are alive is best disposed of by the activities that are life's witness, distinguishing always between work done for the good of others and in the Master's name and that done merely to please ourselves and to win approbation.

The new birth is the beginning of the life that is henceforth to increase and mature, coming at length into the perfect image of the Pattern. The series of topics on "The Making of a Christian" begins here, but it does not end with this. A fatal defect is the putting of the beginning of life for the sufficient sum of a Christian experience. Let each newly born child desire the sincere milk of the word that he may grow thereby.

Missionary Department.

[Communications for this department should be addressed Herman Newman, 1010 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.]

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE F. A. I. M., TENTH MONTH 1, 1904.

With more missionaries to help plan and labor, we are thankful that, during the past quarter, we have been able to more clearly define and more satisfactorily care for the various departments of the work here.

Emory J. Rees, by close attention and plenty of hard work on his part, has with a few men effected a complete change in the gardening department. This means considerable to each missionary at meal times, as well as to impart better instruction to our employees along agricultural lines and furnish an object lesson for all who come on the station.

The school department has also been a sharer in the benefits of an increased working force. Deborah G. Rees, assisted by Cherubini Matolas, the missionary's private instructor in Swahili, is giving instruction in reading, writing, numbers and singing. Adelaide W. Hole assists in the sewing class held twice a week for the boys, and conducts a separate class three times a week for the native women living on the station, of which there are now seven in number. Six of these are wives of employees, and the seventh is a sister of one of the married women. One couple have a child two months old, and another couple recently came to live with us who have a child about two years old. We note with no little satisfaction and thankfulness the fact that there are several native families started on the station to be reared under the influence of the Gospel.

The work at the dam progresses under the care of Arthur B. Chilson. Some blasting with dynamite is facilitating the preparations for the outcoming saw-mill.

In addition to his dispensary work, Dr. Blackburn is training a few men to make and burn bricks for building purposes.

We have erected the following thatched buildings during the past quarter: one for our Swahili teacher and wife, one for a workman with wife and child, one for the cooks of E. J. Rees and E. T. Hole, as well as a double cook house for these two families. The latter building has a corrugated iron roof. Also, a new cattle boma is nearing completion.

The Government is now having the natives work, under our supervision, on the Kisumu cart road between Kaimosi and their outpost.

Our report, Seventh month 1st, mentioned the serious interruption caused by the Nandi trouble during that quarter, and its possible consequences. You may rejoice with us in the fact that never before in the brief history of this work have the natives of the opposing, intractable Nandi tribe appeared so friendly. This does not mean that they are coming freely upon the station, as do other natives, or that it is wise for us to go freely or carelessly in their country; but by twos and threes they frequently come to trade or pass through the station. These things indicate that the barrier of mistrust and the inbred hostility to all advance of Europeans is beginning to weaken. We believe this is the first office work of the Holy Spirit upon their hearts in preparing the way for the precious seed of the kingdom.

There is nothing remarkable to report from our daily Gospel service, but a good degree of interest is being shown. It has seemed best, on account of the small-pox, to discontinue our fortnightly trips to Kivini's until the disease shall abate.

The people of Ogalo, a chief about eight miles west of here, have built a hut similar to the one at Kivini's, and Arthur B. Chilson has undertaken to spend a Sabbath there every two weeks.

Other itinerating is done week by week among the people nearer at hand. Also a few magic lantern exhibitions of the life of Christ were given on the station in Seventh month by Arthur B. Chilson. These were made possible through the kindness of J. J. Willis, a C. M. S. missionary of Uganda, who loaned us his apparatus.

Arthur B. Chilson devotes one evening per week to a prayer and inquiry meeting for the boys and men of the station, and Virginia L. Blackburn does the same for the native women.

In Seventh month, Bishop Tucker, of Uganda, with two of the society's missionaries, visited us. They propose opening work in Kavirondo, and came to canvass the question of bounds for missionary effort. Their present plan is to open a station, next First month, in the Maragolia Hills, about eight or nine miles north and a little west of Kisumu. We have made inquiry, hoping to purchase a team of mules and harness, but find them very scarce and high priced. We will endeavor to procure these later, as they would be a great help in the work. Three more of our bullocks died in Seventh month, leaving us with only seven. Most of them are too small for heavy work.

The surveyor's stakes (at 100-foot spacings) on our boundary lines have been replaced by cuttings from a tall palm-like tree found here. These will make permanent landmarks, in addition to which we intend to keep the boundary path cut down as at present.

You will be pleased to learn that we have finally succeeded in closing the bargain with the Government for the Kaimosi estate. The purchase price of two rupees (64 cents) per acre, or $549.76, has been paid for 858 and a fraction acres, together with $76.80 for survey fees, and $11.20 for revenue stamps and recording of documents. The property now stands in the name of The Friends' Africa Industrial Mission.

EDGAR T. HOLE.

EXTRACTS OF THE F. A. I. M. MEDICAL REPORT, TENTH MONTH 1, 1904.

Three hundred and seventy-two cases were treated during the last quarter, including some of small-pox. On account of the epidemic of this disease which is raging in the Kakemega district, about ten miles north of our station, we have done what we can to quarantine the infected district, and after thoroughly investigating the extent of the epidemic, we have found it best to stop all itinerating, and all communication with that section, except as the medical work calls us there.

In investigating the extent and area over which the epidemic extends, it was necessary to go into it, and this was done Ninth month 6-8. During these two days, forty-two cases were visited, and had we had the time, and had it been necessary, we could have seen hundreds. We have done eighteen vaccinations, and would do hundreds if we could but secure the virus. We have put the situation before the Government and have declared our willingness to assist them in any measures they may see fit to adopt in order to stamp out the disease.

The general medical work goes on about as usual. On account of pressure of industrial work, house building, etc., we have but very little time to devote to it, and for this cause it is not developed or increased as we should be glad to have it. We simply attend to what must be done in this line, and have one hour for dispensary work per day. We have plans for medical itinerating, hospital work, etc., but they must wait until we can be relieved from other work.

We see a great field of service in this line, and will gladly devote our entire time to it when possible. There are open doors before us, and our desire is that no opportunity may be neglected which will lead to these people coming to a saving knowledge of Christ.

Correspondence.

Editor AMERICAN FRIEND:

For the information of interested Friends we submit herewith a statement showing the amounts received and paid out by Miles White, Jr., treasurer of the Five Years' Meeting for the periods ending Ninth month 30th, 1903, and Ninth month 30th, 1904. Also a condensed statement showing the receipts and expenditures for the whole period.

The assessments have been made by the Finance Committee of the Five Years' Meeting in the manner provided on page 42 of the minutes. The minutes, page 44, provide that "the funds . . . shall be paid out as follows:

"Second. Upon the certification of the chairman and secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions and the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board (and) the expenses of administration and correspondence of said respective boards authorized by the Discipline."

Both the minutes of the Five Years' Meeting and the Discipline itself fail to delegate to any committee the authority to say what expenses are included in the above clause.

We found vouchers signed by the various officers of the different committees and boards for all payments made by the treasurer.

Thine truly,

TIMOTHY NICHOLSON,
FRANCIS A. WRIGHT,
CHARLES H. JONES,
Auditors.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

The following letter has just been sent to every member of the United States Senate:

"Dear Sir: We invite your attention to the enclosed resolutions, unanimously adopted at our annual meeting, referring to House Bill No. 14,749, to enable Indian Territory and Oklahoma to form a state government. It should be said, in addition, that there is one vital omission in the bill—namely, that the jurisdiction of the United States will cease March 4, 1906; and from that time until laws can be enacted by the new state there will be no statute imposing penalties for violations of the provision prohibiting the sale, barter, etc., of liquor. Before the infant state can adopt laws which will be operative on the point there is nothing, under the circumstances that will exist, to prevent the saloon from becoming firmly entrenched in what is now Indian Territory.

"It is, therefore, absolutely necessary for the protection of the Indian from the liquor traffic that federal jurisdiction be extended to cover the interregnum.

"We earnestly hope that you will appreciate the gravity of the situation, to the whites as well as to the Indians, and that you will advocate an amendment to the bill reserving Federal jurisdiction in the premises for at least ten years, or until adequate local laws shall be enacted.

"Respectfully,

"INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION."

RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS, It is the sense of this meeting that the United States Government is morally and legally bound to perpetuate the agreements already made, and recently confirmed, with the Five Civilized Tribes of Indian Territory to protect them from the liquor traffic;

Resolved, That this meeting heartily concurs in the resolutions adopted by the Twenty-second Annual Conference of Friends of the Indian, held at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., October 21, 1904, to wit:

"WHEREAS, The Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of the Indian Territory made solemn agreements with the United States, in the years 1897, 1898 and 1902, for the surrender of their lands to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, providing that the sale, barter or giving of intoxicating liquors to any person within the district now constituting the Indian Territory shall be forever prohibited, which agreements were fully accepted and approved by the United States; and

"WHEREAS, The said agreements constitute a permanent unalterable condition applicable to the disposition and use of the before mentioned lands; therefore Resolved, That we call upon the Congress of the United States to duly execute the said agreement by inserting in the Enabling Act that may be passed to constitute a state of the Indian Territory, either separately or in conjunction with Oklahoma, such provision as will secure, by constitutional enactment, the permanent enforcement of the said agreements."

Resolved, That the secretary of the Indian Rights Association be instructed to send a copy of the foregoing to every member of the United States Senate.

We earnestly request our members and friends to write immediately to their representatives in the United States Senate, urging them to see that the bill (H. R. No. 14,749) shall be so amended that adequate provisions shall be made to rigidly enforce the laws prohibiting the sale, barter or giving of intoxicating liquors in those sections of the state-to-be that are commonly known as "Indian Country."

After a careful examination of the pending bill, a competent lawyer informs us that it does not appear clear that there will be any laws in existence after March 4, 1906, to make prohibitory measures effective until the new state shall see fit to adopt a suitable law.

In view of the undisputed proneness of the Indian to strong drink and the demoralizing effects that would follow its unrestricted use, the friends of the Red Man should not be content to permit this bill to leave in the slightest doubt the question of ample authority to the Federal government to fully protect its wards in the new state.

An "Indian Territory Church Federation for Prohibition Statehood" (embracing all the religious bodies in that section) was organized in September, 1904; and in the following month a delegation from that body saw President Roosevelt on behalf of the movement. The President expressed himself as in hearty accord with the Federation's object.

As the bill was reported by the Committee on December 15th, it is likely to be considered at an early date by the Senate. The importance of promptly acting in the manner herein suggested will, therefore, be appreciated.

The co-operation of the press (which has been so effective heretofore in such matters) is earnestly requested.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Thomas Newlin, of Chicago University, is conducting a series of special meetings, which began the 25th inst., at Bloomingdale, Ind. He will be accompanied by his wife, and will also be assisted in the meetings by Alice A. Mendenhall, who is very acceptably serving that meeting as pastor.

David Tatum writes from 2478 N. Polina St., Chicago, Ill.: "My health is remarkably good for one well on in my eighty-second year, and my vigor and activity have not abated through age and as the years pass swiftly by. I have had some highly favored meetings in the ministry of the Gospel and the cause of temperance and prohibition in the 'Sunny South.'"

C. C. Brown, an evangelist of Auburn, Ill., has just closed a very successful revival meeting in Bear Creek Meeting, Iowa, where his brother, E. Howard Brown, is serving as pastor. The Gospel was preached with power and the demonstration of the Spirit. Fifty-six souls were saved or sanctified, and the church in general was revived and strengthened.

We have received a copy of "Our Missionary Work," published by the Mission Board of New York Yearly Meeting. It shows a very wide range of activity at High Point, North Carolina, in Mexico, in China, in Cuba and in Indian Territory. This board does a great work, and it deserves the hearty support and sympathy of those who have means and the heart to give.

William and Bertha Dixon, evangelists, formerly from California, recently from Cleveland, Ohio, held a revival meeting with the Friends in Knightstown, Ind. Commencing the 27th ult. and closing the 18th inst. Two meetings were held daily, one at 2.30 p. m. and the other at 7.30 p. m. The afternoon meetings were small, the evening meetings well attended. The service was good and results favorable.

The following is taken from the Whittier (Cal.) Register: "A state conference of the Friends' Church, for the discussion of methods, needs and conditions of church and evangelistic work, began at the Whittier Friends' Church last evening with a sermon by Rev. Lindley A. Wells, of Long Beach." Mary M. Brown, John H. Douglas, Harry R. Keates, Matilda Atkinson, Caleb Jenkins, C. E. Tebbetts and R. Esther Smith are mentioned on the programme.

Haverford Monthly Meeting was opened in Haverford Meeting-house at Haverford, Pa., on the evening of Twelfth month 22d, 1904. The meeting was attended by a large number of Friends. The members of a committee appointed by Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting were present, as well as committees of women Friends from all the Monthly Meetings composing Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting. David G. Alsop was chosen clerk for this first session. The first important minute adopted was one liberating John B. Garrett for religious service in the limits of Muncy Monthly Meeting.

Friends' Bloomingdale Academy, Bloomingdale, Ind., closed the fall term Twelfth month 21st with a public entertainment given by the Sehiar Class. This has been a very successful term both in attendance and in work accomplished. Although there is sharp competition from public high schools located in near-by towns, yet friends of this institution still believe there is yet a great work for this academy to do, and they rejoice that it continues to prosper. At a recent meeting of the Academic Association—a literary organization which has met quarterly for more than forty years—a committee was appointed to have a gavel made from lumber grown on the academy campus, and to have it presented to Joseph G. Cannon, Speaker of the House, in memory of old school days which he spent here.

Grand River Monthly Meeting, held at Wyandotte, I. T., and Ottawa Monthly Meeting, held at Ottawa, I. T., last month, were lively and interesting meetings. The missionaries of the various stations were present. They evince deep spiritual life. The work in those localities is certainly in good hands. Some Friends seem to think that the Indian members are only recognized as nominal members of Kansas Yearly Meeting. This is not correct. They have always been regarded as regular members and have filled important places, such as ministers, elders, overseers. The present clerk and treasurer of Ottawa Monthly Meeting are Indians. The whites are more prominent than formerly, because they are numerous; but the Indians will not be crowded out, because so many of them are valuable members on account of their education, ability and Christian characters.

Events and Comments.

For the first time in forty years the United States Senate will sit as a High Court of Impeachment for the trial of Justice Charles Swayne, of the United States District Court of Florida. The case, it is stated, will probably be brought up in First month, though it may be deferred to a later time. But there should be as little delay as possible.

The report of the United States Commissioner of Education for the fiscal year ending Sixth month 30th, 1904, shows that 16,009,361 pupils, or 20 per cent. of the entire population of the country, attended the public schools during that year. As compared with the previous six years, this percentage shows a slight decrease in the number of pupils. The total cost of the public school system is given as $251,457,625, an increase of $16,000,000 over the previous year. It amounts to $3.15 per capita of total population, and $22.75 per capita per pupil.

The powers given the Commissioner of Corporations under what is known as the publicity clause of the act establishing the Department of Commerce and Labor are to be put to the test first against the Beef Trust. Commissioner Garfield will go in person to Chicago, Kansas City and other points where information can be obtained directly from members of the corporations in the Beef Trust, and will set up a court of inquiry, before which witnesses will be summoned and questioned. It is the plan that the Commissioner shall be accompanied by clerks and stenographers and, if necessary, by able counsel, who may conduct the examination of witnesses. Witnesses before the Commissioner will have the right to be represented by counsel.

John Hay, Secretary of State, in a second circular note to the Powers, made public last week, suggests that a further interchange of views preparatory to the formulating of a programme for another Peace Conference at The Hague be effected through the International Bureau under the control of the permanent administrative council of The Hague. The Secretary summarizes the replies of all the Powers to his note of Tenth month 21st, and expresses the gratification of the President at the cordial reception of his invitation. Having taken this initial step, however, the Secretary says the President feels that he has gone as far as he appropriately can, and that with the general acceptance of his invitation in principle, "the future conduct of the affair may fitly follow its normal channels."

According to the report of the Philippine Board of Health, if the native residents understood the proper care of children the death rate would not be higher than that for communities of equal size in the United States. The total number of deaths in Seventh month was 1,100 and 708 of them were of infants under two years of age. Even in New York, however, there was once a similar heavy infant mortality, and it was not many years ago. The death rate in Manila was lowest among the American residents, only 8.05 to the thousand annually. The Filipinos themselves, owing principally to the high death rate among infants, had a rate of 61.58, which the Department of Health is doing its best to reduce. The low death rate among the American residents suggests that the tropical conditions of life in Manila are not as bad for the white man as they are usually painted. It is significant, also, that the birth rate among the American Manilans is higher than that of any other class of the population, except the natives themselves.

Prof. W. F. Willcox, of Cornell University, recently published some interesting figures on "the majority sex." He says: "In continental United States there are 1,638,321 more males than females, or about 2 in each 100 people.

"Probably in the population of the world as a whole, and certainly in that half of it which has been counted with distinction of sex, there are several millions more males than females.

"This is an analysis of the religious thought of the Quaker poet as observed throughout his noblest poems, that suggested the poet's impressions of the Inner Light, of Christ, of optimism, of religion and humanity, of nature, and of the future life. The author has entered sympathetically into a heart study of Whittier's poems, and this estimate of the poet's message is a distinguished addition to all poetic literature."—BOSTON COURIER.

"In continental United States, however, the relative excess of males is greater than the average for all countries.

"Europe has an excess of females; every other continent, so far as known, has an excess of males.

"The divisions of continental United States with the smallest proportion of males are the District of Columbia (47.4 per cent.), Massachusetts (48.7 per cent.), and Rhode Island (49.1 per cent.); those with the largest are Wyoming (62.9 per cent.), and Montana (61.6 per cent.).

"As a rule sparsely settled regions have an excess of males and densely settled regions an excess of females.

"American cities as a rule have more females than males. In the 1,861 cities, each having in 1900 at least 2,500 inhabitants, there were 201,959 more females than males, and this notwithstanding the many Western cities which contained more males than females and the enormous number of foreign born in the country, five-ninths of them male and a large proportion of them living in the cities. . . ."

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a table-spoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

THE PRECIOUSNESS OF CHRIST.

"Unto you therefore which believe He is precious."—1 Peter 2: 7.

The preciousness of Christ our Lord!
How real and true Thou art,
Dear Saviour, who has died for us,
To each believing heart!

Though angel choirs shall sound Thy praise
To all eternity,
Thy tender love, Thy watchful care
Still condescend to me.

Thou bore my sins upon the cross,
Thy blood did then atone,
And Thou dost intercede for me
Before Thy Father's throne.

And so before Thy church beloved,
And all the world I'd sing
The preciousness of Christ my Lord, Redeemer, Saviour, King!

A PREDIGESTED BOY.

"I callate, Jerushy," half mused the old farmer, "that there boy of Mrs. Dr. Brown-Jones that's a-summerin' here is in a way to get sp'iled in the makin'."

"Be you a-meanin' her as was Belinda Alvry Stubbins afore she married that Englishman with two names stitched together?" Jerushy interrupted Jonathan to ask.

"I ain't alludin' to anybody else. She raised him from a baby on predigested foods, an' now she's afraid to change to ham an' eggs, an' they do say that his teeth don't amount to shucks for want of exercise, an' his stomach is so weak that he can't digest a cracker. But that's the least part of Belinda Alvry's foolishness. She conceited that the boy's mind must have as easy a time as his stomach, so she wouldn't never let him go to school for fear he'd have to tackle the multiplication table or learn to bound Chiny or conjugate 'I am; you are; he, she, or it is.' So she got geography games an' mathematical games an' historical games for him to play, an' sort o' predigested his knowledge fur him, so's t'wouldn't distress him any more than his food.

"I understand that she wouldn't let him go to Sunday school for fear he might hear something harsh or crude 'bout duty an' self-denial, an' she never let him read the Bible hisself, but predigested that for him, too, tellin' him that all actions were either beautiful or unlovely, an' he must cultivate the beautiful because unlovely things are unpleasant. They do say that he doesn't know what right an' wrong are, an' she never tells him that he ought or must do a thing, but asks him if he doesn't think it would be beautiful.

"The fond, foolish woman predigested his sports, too. She wouldn't let him play baseball with the boys here because it was too exercisin' an' he might have to run when he didn't feel like it. She callated that parlor croquet or whist would rather suit his constitution better. He's as spin'lin' as a whipstock. By an' by, I presume, she'll pick out some likely girl an' predigest a wife for Freddy, after she's hired tutors to predigest him through college. What's the use of ever takin' such chaps out of the incubator?"—United Presbyterian.

HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE

Told for Young and Old

By JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT

Regular Contributor of Notes on Lessons in "Sunday-School Times," and Author of "Revised Normal Lessons," "Studies in Old Testament History,"

"Studies in the Four Gospels," Etc., Etc.

The Bible Story Written for Twentieth Century Readers

The author includes the whole Bible narrative in ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHT STORIES. Each story is complete, and has a title so striking and new that it interests every one. These stories are unique in that they give in the simple language of to-day and in a continuous and consecutive form the great truths and important facts of the Bible. The stories are not made to explain any doctrine or teaching, but to give the facts in a way which will interest both young and old, and at the same time be easily remembered. While every story is complete in itself, all taken together form a connected narrative of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book for the home, the school, and the library, and an invaluable aid for the parent and teacher.

The Pictorial Feature of this Book is Superb

It contains nearly THREE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS. They have been drawn and selected with the greatest care to give wholesome and correct ideas of Bible times and customs. There are SIXTEEN COLOR PLATES reproduced in the artist's original colors, also two hundred and fifty or more half-tone engravings illustrating the text.

Received with Enthusiastic Approval Everywhere

From FRANCIS E. CLARK, President United Society of Christian Endeavor.

"You have told the old story in a most fresh and fascinating style. The illustrations are admirable. The book will be a great help in preparing for Junior Endeavor work."

From J. R. MILLER, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Presby't'n Church.

"No man is better fitted to write such a book than Dr. Hurlbut. He tells his stories in an interesting way."

From BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"A charming volume that will cultivate the taste of young readers for the Sacred Word. The illustrations are fine."

From WILLIAM I. HAVEN, Secretary of the American Bible Society.

"I know of nothing quite so charming both in arrangement and in illustration as this Story of the Bible."

From Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT, Indianapolis, Ind.

"This new volume by Dr. Hurlbut is pre-eminent a book for this time. It tells in a taking way the stories of the Bible, and will be an invaluable aid to parents."

From HENRY A. BUTTZ, President of Drew Theological Seminary.

"The style is fresh, and the background of the story so clearly put that it cannot fail to be interesting, not only to the young, but also to those in older years."

From GEORGIA L. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary of American Institute of Sacred Literature, Chicago.

"It is the first book which I have seen which gives the right sort of illustrative material."

From EDWARD EVERETT HALE, Boston.

"We have read your book with great pleasure. I shall put it in the hands of my Sunday School people."

This beautiful book contains 800 octavo pages, nearly 300 fine illustrations and weighs nearly four pounds; is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth with special cover design in gold and colored inks. The price everywhere is $2.50 net.

Educational Outlook.

It is expected that Friends' Select School, Philadelphia, will re-open as usual Ninth month 19th. For three years past the lists have been full, making an aggregate attendance in the three departments of about 330 pupils.

Fairmount Academy, Fairmount, Ind., enters its twentieth year Ninth month 12th, with a bright outlook. In Sixth month a $22,000 endowment was raised. A $400 gymnasium outfit has been secured through efforts of students and faculty. Cement walks and a cement floor in the basement are being completed this summer. The school has recently added one year to its college preparatory courses, which admit to the best universities. One hundred and fifty dollars will pay a student's total expenses for a year. Forest A. Foraker, B.S., of the Science Department, was united in marriage with Hortense Evinger, at the home of the bride's parents, on Seventh month 5th, at Savona, Ohio. The class of 1904, at their picnic held Seventh month 15th, voted to contribute $1.00 a year each for the benefit of the library fund.

Whittier Academy, Salem, Ind., will be under the care of Milo E. Rees, A.B., and Carrie A. Powell for the coming year. The prospects are good for a fair enrollment and a successful year's work. The great drawback to Whittier is its lack of financial backing.

The fall term at Oak Grove Seminary and Bailey Institute, Vassalboro, Maine, opens Ninth month 13th. The prospect seems excellent for a full school and one of the most successful in its history. It is planned to give special emphasis during the coming year to the religious work and life of the school. The principal, George L. Jones, has been successful in engaging as a Christian worker and teacher, Homer J. Coppack, a graduate of Earlham College, who comes highly recommended for the position by those competent to judge. Many improvements are being made in the school building.

Haviland Academy, Kansas, closed a very successful year Sixth month 9th, with seven graduates. Lulu Dean, of Penn

NEWBERG, OREGON

IN the charming Willamette Valley and near the majestic river, with stately firs in their native grandeur overlooking the campus, with the Cascade Mountains on the east, the Coast Range Mountains on the west and with rolling forest-covered hills on the north, PACIFIC COLLEGE is beautiful for situation.

Neat, clean and attractive buildings furnish an inviting and home-like place for the student.

Carefully arranged courses of study, well equipped laboratories and libraries, and a competent Faculty representing the best schools in the East, offer exceptional advantages to the earnest seeker after knowledge.

The Institution stands for High Scholarship and Christian Culture

PACIFIC COLLEGE is a Friends' College. It is the only Friends' school in all the Pacific Northwest. You are studying the map now in the thought of the Lewis and Clark Exposition in 1905. PACIFIC COLLEGE is twenty-five miles south of Portland on the west side of the Willamette. It is in the center of a vast domain. We are helping to make it what it ought to be.

HENRY EDWIN MCGREW, President

College, Iowa, was principal. The school will open again Ninth month 21st, under the direction of Milton Kenworthy, of Iowa, who is also a graduate of Penn College. Prospects are good for a prosperous year.

Southland College, at Southland, Ark., the Friends' school for the colored people, and the oldest of its kind, closed its year's work Fifth month 13th. Students and friends of the college displayed much interest during the year, and the work done was very satisfactory. Improvements are being made to enlarge and make more efficient the work for the coming year.

On Sixth month 17th the Oakwood Seminary, New York, closed one of the most successful term's work in recent years. This summer the whole heating system is being improved, and some repairs made in the building. The outlook for next year promises even better success than the year just past. Samuel H. Hodgins is still principal of the school.

Nebraska Central College, Nebraska, has a brighter future for this year than usual. It has greatly enlarged its courses, but will place its stress upon the academic work, together with its business and Bible courses.

The prospect for Stella Academy, Oklahoma, is very bright. John Howard is principal, with Alta Howard and George Wright, assistants. The Board of Trustees are making many needed improvements. The present building is being enlarged for library and recitation rooms. A new cellar is being put in, with accommodations for furnace heating. Many new books are being added to the library, and new apparatus is being put in the laboratory. These improvements with cottages for dormitories will be ready for the fall term. The Friends have responded liberally to every call for the academy. Nathan Brown, the pastor, has proved helpful to every interest of the school. Several substantial workers for the school will move away this fall, but others equally as good have moved in.

Haverford College, Pa., has received from Samuel R. Shipley a donation of $5,000 to establish a fund in the name of his father, Thomas Shipley, a noted Philadelphian and friend of the colored people. The income will be used to secure lectures on English literature from distinguished authorities.

TUITION LOW FACILITIES GOOD

A high grade of scholarship is required of all teachers—who are college graduates, and, in addition, all but two have had university training. Moral and religious care is extended. Only worthy and ambitious young men and young women desired. Two courses open to students—classical and scientific—with elective studies predominating in the junior and senior years. Population of town, 4,000—a church-going community. No saloons. Two boarding halls well-heated and lighted.

For Further Information, Call On, or Address,

THE PRESIDENT,

WILMINGTON, OHIO

North Branch Academy, Kansas, founded in 1889, will open its fall term Ninth month 13th, with Edna Goodwin, A.B., Friends' University, as principal, and Gertrude Wiltsee, A.B., Earlham College, assistant. The prospect is fair for a successful year. The school rooms have been put in good repair, and students are already engaging rooms.

Damascus Academy, Ohio, is opening this year with a good attendance. Walter S. Painter is the principal, and Laura Hobson, assistant. T. C. Kenworthy is in charge of the Biblical Department. The work of the Academy is much appreciated by the people of Damascus. The Christian spirit is excellent. The scholarship sound.

Chapel Academy, Chapel, Mo., closed last spring with good interest. R. P. Bogue, the principal, is busy during the summer months working in the interest of the school. Prospects are encouraging for next year.

George E. Hamilton, a member of the Junior Class, Earlham College, has been awarded the Cecil Rhodes Scholarship in Oxford University from Indiana. This scholarship is good for three years, and the stipend is $1,500 per year. Other honors won by Earlham students during the year are the first place in oratory in the State oratorical contest; the championship of the State in debate, for the seventh successive year; and the championship in football, and in field athletics among the Indiana colleges. Murray Shipley Wildman, Earlham, '93, has just received the Ph.D. degree from the University of Chicago, and Pliny Earle Goddard, '92, the Ph.D. degree from the University of California.

From Penn College, Iowa: The year just closed was in many respects the best in its history. Prospects for the coming year are good. One very encouraging feature is that several young ministers of the gospel are planning to attend. It cannot be but gratifying to those interested in both church and college that those who are to be leaders are recognizing that a liberal education is indispensable, and that no amount of enthusiasm or zeal, however commendable these may be, will answer for real mental training. On the other hand, no amount of knowledge, unaided by the proper inspiration and faith, will crown the life with success. It is expected that the coming year will be one of great accomplishment to the young men and women who cast in their lot with Penn.

The vacation period has brought about important improvements at Wilmington College, Ohio. The beauty of the campus has been greatly increased by a winding cement walk six feet wide, running from the street to the buildings. The frame buildings have been repainted, making things take on a freshness and beauty for yearly meeting and the opening of college. The professors are returning from their study and travel, fresh and vigorous for the year's work. The outlook is good for a full attendance. The college spirit is growing rapidly.

A very great honor has come to Pacific College through the work of one of its students, Walter Miles. He has recently won the first place in the national oratorical contest at Indianapolis on "Prohibition." Altogether not less than 700 orations were prepared for the contest, and Walter Miles won all the way from the county to the State, and finally to the national contest. That is good work.

A number of improvements are being made at Friends' University during the summer vacation. A six-foot cement walk is being put in from the front entrance to University Avenue. A number of new rooms are being finished and a central staircase constructed. Prof. Francisco is returning from her year's leave of absence in Germany to take charge of the School of Music. The outlook for all departments is encouraging.

Friends' School at Hillside, Indian Territory, enrolled 126 pupils last year—71 were Indians and 55 white. The school year was divided into two terms, the first of four months, and the second, five, making nine months in all. All grades are taught from kindergarten to the second-year high school, inclusive. Lessons on the piano and organ are given if desired. Meetings for worship, Sabbath School and Christian Endeavor are held in the schoolhouse. Thirty-four boarders were accommodated at the school; others boarded in private families near by. Some of the pupils who attended last year rode from two to seven miles, coming on horseback or in rigs. Five tribes of Indians are represented among the students. The prospects for next year are encouraging.

Haverford College

IS SITUATED IN A BEAUTIFUL SUBURB OF PHILADELPHIA ON A TRACT OF 225 ACRES

ABOUT sixty of these were laid out seventy years ago as a park for the new College. They have been improved since then, and now supply every facility for healthful retirement and recreation. Cricket, football, tennis, golf and skating are the outdoor sports for the students, and for these there is every advantage. On this tract there are (a) Founders' Hall, opened in 1833, now containing the scientific laboratories and the dining rooms; (b) the Library, containing 42,000 books, and ample space for reading and study, with 273 periodicals and many pamphlets; it is open all day for free use; (c) Barclay Hall, a dormitory for eighty students, opened in 1877; (d) Chase Hall, for recitations; (e) Whitall Hall, for mechanical work and draughting; (f) the Observatory, with two equatorials and a full line of minor instruments; (g) Lloyd Hall, a new dormitory; (h) the Gymnasium, a new building, costing $50,000, containing a main room 60x90 feet, swimming pool, bowling alley, reading room and trophy room; (i) Roberts Hall, just completed, containing college offices, an auditorium seating one thousand persons, and fireproof rooms to house the valuable autograph collection of the late Charles Roberts; (j) Merion Cottage, a new dormitory for 20 students.

The Faculty contains the following, all men of learning and experience:

ISAAC SHARPLESS, Sc.D., LL.D., PRESIDENT, and Professor of Ethics.

ALLEN C. THOMAS, A.M., LIBRARIAN, and Professor of History.

LYMAN BEECHER HALL, Ph.D.,
John Farnum Professor of Chemistry.

LEVI T. EDWARDS, A.M.,
Professor of Mechanics and Electricity.

FRANCIS B. GUMMERE, Ph.D.,
Professor of English and German.

ERNEST WILLIAM BROWN, Sc.D., F.R.S.,
Professor of Mathematics.

WILFRED P. MUSTARD, Ph.D.,
Professor of Latin.

JAMES A. BABBITT, A.M., M.D.,
Instructor in Physical Training.

RUFUS M. JONES, A.M., Litt.D.,
Associate Professor of Philosophy.

OSCAR MARSHALL CHASE, S.M., COLLEGE SECRETARY, and Instructor in Drawing.

ALBERT S. BOLLES, Ph.D., LL.D.,
Lecturer on Commercial Law and Banking.

DON C. BARRETT, Ph.D., DEAN, and Associate Professor of Political Science.

ALBERT ELMER HANCOCK, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of English and German.

LEGH WILBER REID, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of Mathematics.

WILLIAM WISTAR COMFORT, Ph.D.,
Instructor in Romance Languages.

WILLIAM W. BAKER, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of Greek.

FREDERICK PALMER, A.M.,
Instructor in Physics.

The annual cost of maintaining this Faculty is over $40,000, which is about one-half the total running expenses of the College, including the board of students. The charges, including board, room rent and tuition, are as follows:

Lloyd Hall	$575.
Barclay Hall	$500 and $450.
Founders' Hall	$400.
Merion Cottage	$350.

Board for all students is the same, irrespective of the position of the room. Scholarships, won in open competition, may reduce the above expenses.

Haverford is especially a Friends' College, though one-half of its students are members of other denominations, received on equal footing. Its managers desire to make it a headquarters for Quaker scholarship and ideals, and invite the co-operation of all favorable to this conception.

For catalogue and other information address the President, Haverford, Pa.

APPRECIATIVENESS.

BY HENRY V. M'CLURE.

When Constans L. Goodell was a boy, his father, a farmer, desired that his son should be a farmer like himself, in the hope that he would remain at home with his parents, take the farm into his own hands and permit them thus to spend their lives happily together with their only child. The boy, however, wished an education, and such an education as could be obtained only by leaving home for school and college. He was eighteen years old when his father and he drove together to meet the stage that was to carry him away. The father, as wisely and lovingly as he could, talked to him of the experiences he was to meet.

Then at parting he took from his pocket what money he could spare and gave it to the boy. As the boy received the money from his father's toilworn hand, there arose within him the thought of his father's kindness and sacrifices in his behalf. That thought took possession of his heart. He resolved he would never forget what those hard-earned savings meant, and he would be worthy of them and would requite them. There came to him then and there appreciativeness of the affection and hopes whereby was granted the opportunity of his education. The result was that the boy all through life did the very best he could to be an honor to his home and a blessing to the world.

I earnestly hope that no student upon entering a distant school or college will forget either the traditions, the sacrifices, or the hopes of the home he is leaving. The people in all the world who love and will love the student best are the people of that home; they will do more for him, will think oftener of him, and will be more unselfish for him, than any others. That home may be plain and simple; but if it has traditions of integrity, purity and self-denial, let those traditions be laid away for safe keeping at the very center of the student's heart. There is no heritage in all the earth richer and more to be prized than such family traditions. It would be a shame to let them come to their end with you. Rather let them be an unceasing stimulus to your own high thinking and living, and be sure that you pass them on to the future, glorified by your perpetuation of them.

MOSES BROWN SCHOOL

Formerly Friends School

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Name of this school has been recently changed to that of the Founder, Moses Brown, a distinguished colonial educator, and a devoted member of the Society of Friends.

It Will Be the Aim of the school, under its new title, to preserve all that is best in its past history while, at the same time, somewhat enlarging the scope of its usefulness. Although distinctly a Friends' School, it has, from the first, in accordance with the liberal policy of its Founder, admitted members of other religious denominations.

It Combines all the advantages of a Christian home and a

"GUARDED EDUCATION"

with the most approved modern pedagogical methods. It offers a thorough preparation for the best colleges and scientific schools as well as general courses of study.

Its Healthful Location is unsurpassed, and its ample grounds offer unusual opportunities for athletics and outdoor sports.

There is a Separate Department for children under twelve years of age, whose studies and physical exercise will receive careful attention.

A Large Endowment makes the terms moderate, especially to members of the Society of Friends.

LOCATION. The location of the school is one of great natural beauty. In a remarkable healthful locality, on a hill of moderate height, but commanding to the south and west an extensive view of farmland, river, forests and distant mountain ranges; on the north and east large forests of hemlock, pine and oak. It is doubtful if the lover of nature and outdoor life could find a more attractive school-home.

RELIGIOUS LIFE. Oak Grove Seminary was founded by members of the Society of Friends in order to give their children a thorough education under Christian influences, and in the forty-six years of its existence, the aim of the school has remained unchanged. The majority of the graduates leave the school earnest Christians, imbued with the idea of personal duty and service.

COURSES OF STUDY. The Courses of Study are carefully arranged. The College-Preparatory is strong and thorough. The Literary-Scientific is based on the modern elective method, and offers opportunity for a selection of such studies as are best suited to the needs and conditions of the individual pupil. The Commercial Course, covering two years, is thoroughly up-to-date.

ATHLETICS. The value of athletics in school life is thoroughly recognized, and all forms of pure, healthy sport are encouraged. There is ample opportunity for all kinds of out-door games and recreation.

EXPENSES. Through the generosity of many interested friends, it is possible to make the price for board and tuition very low. The total necessary expense for the year varies from $130 to $150. This can be reduced in many cases, if early application is made, by labor on the part of the pupils, or by income from funds.

Year opens Ninth month thirteenth. Catalogues on request.

GEORGE L. JONES, PRINCIPAL.

Here is a great opportunity for the students to draw a deep breath, a breath that comes from the very sources of his being, and say, "By God's help those sacrifices shall not be in vain. I will make my industry and carefulness such that my parents shall feel more than repaid for all they have done for me." As despicable as any conduct that can be imagined is that of a youth who lets a mother and sisters slave for him while he wastes their provision in frivolities. But it is incomparably grand when a youth, checking himself from mischief, girds up his energy for new development because he lovingly remembers the denial others are braving in his behalf.

Then, too, there are the hopes of the home! Most homes are not asking God that their children shall be eloquent or powerful, but they are asking that they shall be noble, strong and brave—that they shall carry themselves cleanly and shall win the respect of their comrades. It is beautiful when a boy or girl resolves that the wishes of a good home shall never be set aside excepting in cases that are absolutely imperative to conscience and judgment.

But much as home is in an education, it is not all. Here is the institution to which the student has come. It is the place of opportunities. In a certain sense the old has been shut off, as a closed door, and the new now opens—with its apparatus, its teachers, its grounds, its history. All these have come into being at a great cost. The price of liberty is said to be fearfully large; agonies and blood and martyrdom have been paid to secure it. So the price of educational facilities in any given community has been fearfully large. The student is apt to take them as though they flowed about him as freely as the air, as though they were matters of course. If he so takes them, if there is no valuation of what others have done and given that he may have them, then one of the prime elements of his development is omitted. No student and no student's family ever paid the cost of his education. Thousands upon thousands of dollars, often hundreds of thousands of dollars, have their whole power laid at a young person's feet when he enters college. These buildings, these libraries, these mechanical aids, these professorships—whence are they? They are out of human hearts that longed for the uplift of humanity, and

UNIVERSITY AVENUE LOOKING WEST TO FRIENDS UNIVERSITY.

Friends University has now completed six successive years with an average enrollment (excepting the first year) of about 250 students.

A NUCLEUS OF AN ENDOWMENT, amounting to near $60,000 in cash, has been raised by Kansas Friends themselves. James M. Davis, according to promise, has made a warranty deed of all University properties to Kansas Yearly Meeting. No indebtedness shadows the institution. The leading facts are given to assure the permanency of the school to both students and future benefactors. Friends University building, though large, is beautifully proportioned and set off with architectural relief. Twenty-five lecture rooms with modern equipment are now used, besides a commodious auditorium and a large gymnasium. There is a large athletic park enclosed and two convenient dormitories. Friends University is located in the second greatest city in the state. The University avenue paved in asphalt connects the heart of the city with the entrance of the main building. This avenue is shaded with maple and elm, and sidewalks are laid in cement. Electric cars stop at the University walk every ten minutes. The climate is mild and healthful.

CURRICULUM

SCHOOL OF LIBERAL ARTS.—Full four years' college courses, ten optional major subjects. Grants A.B. degree. Teachers' life certificates also granted.

BIBLICAL SCHOOL.—Careful in theological statement, but progressive in scholarship and research. Non-speculative, but evangelical in spirit. College degree (A.B.) given, also shorter and special courses to meet the needs of students.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.—High-grade piano and vocal work, under Miss Lucy Francisco, B.S., A.M. (Earlham), (Bryn Mawr, 1895-7), (Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory of Music, Berlin, Germany, 1903-4).

PREPARATORY SCHOOL.—Three years' work preparatory to entrance in the Freshman year. The standard in this department is gauged by the requirements for entrance in the Kansas State University.

COMMERCIAL SCHOOL.—This department opened last year is directed by a college graduate, and offers full courses in the usual lines.

Students from all States cordially invited to Friends University. Write for catalogue. Address, FRIENDS UNIVERSITY, WICHITA, KANSAS.

out of pockets that valued every cent that went into them, and out of prayers and tears and struggles well-nigh sacred.

I do not expect that the full significance of this fact will be immediately grasped by the student; it takes years to obtain a true and comprehensive view of the past; and only when one himself becomes a public benefactor, does he know the cost of benefactions. But this I should be glad of, that the student should be appreciative of what others—with high hopes—have done to make present opportunities possible to him, and should be appreciative of the benefits those present opportunities place at his disposal. Here are trained minds that will do their best to impart choice information and secure intellectual discipline. Here is an atmosphere that is scholarly. Here is an institution with graduates of distinction. And here is the time and place of preparation for life!

It is a truism that nothing prepares for the service of tomorrow like the faithfulness of to-day. Student life best puts itself in training for the great outside world when it habituates itself to those practices which usually most benefit humanity. I heard a professor at Yale once say that he had watched the course of students for a whole generation, and it was not those who went through college in a happy-go-lucky, careless, desultory way that succeeded in after life, but with few exceptions, it was the men who learned to do worthy things in a worthy way, who could apply themselves to tasks, assume responsibilities, show leadership and handle their powers, that later came to the front.

Oh, it is beautiful to be mature men, strong, brave, mature men out in the world fighting evil, carrying care and feeling the burdens of life! But it is beautiful also to be a student, and have teachers genuinely interested in you, and comrades putting their arms over your shoulders in affection, and pastors praying for you and friends rejoicing in you. And it is beautiful to have all your powers fresh and vigorous, and to have high ideals sounded in your ears and heart, and to be assured that the world is waiting for your enthusiasm and help. Yes, it is beautiful to be a student. I congratulate you that you are a student, and ask you always to be thoughtful enough, brave enough, kind enough and pure enough to appreciate your old home, your present opportunities and your future service.

MOTTO.—Christian training combined with thorough education.

AFFORDS A BROAD AND CAREFUL TRAINING

The Curriculum—Classical, Scientific, Philosophic and Classical Biblical, leading to their appropriate Bachelor's degree.

The Preparatory Course—Covers three full years beyond the common school branches, fully preparing students for college entrance.

A Biblical Department that is sound, evangelistic, and safe, and the college sends out scores of trained workers into the field annually.

The Faculty—All members of the Faculty are specialists in their respective lines.

Material Equipment—The Chemical, Biological and Physical Laboratories are supplied with modern appointments. Good beginnings have been made in working libraries and museums.

Lectures—A Union Lecture Course each year, consisting of six to eight choice numbers.

Athletic—A committee from the Faculty co-operate with the Christian Association in the management of the athletics, thus securing a wise direction and wholesome restraint.

Christian Culture—Live Christian Associations, a large Mission Circle, Prayer meetings, Bible-classes, and other means of grace afford ample opportunity for Christian culture. According to the official report, Penn was the Banner College of Iowa in Christian work.

The Student—Wide-awake, self reliant and courageous, the Penn students are proving worthy in every field they enter. The atmosphere of unselfishness about the College makes the student life home-like from the day of entrance.

Aim—To be a first-class college. To offer the best opportunities at a minimum cost. To fit students for faithful and skillful performance of life's substantial work. To fill them with the right ideas of Christian life and character.

Advantages—Expenses reasonable for good accommodations. A wholesome College atmosphere. Excellent moral and Christian influences. Splendid Musical Department.

BRYN MAWR COLLEGE

A College for Women

SITUATED IN BRYN MAWR, FIVE MILES FROM PHILADELPHIA

THE teaching staff of the college consists of forty-nine men and women, carefully selected for character, teaching ability and scientific acquirements. Full graduate and undergraduate instruction is offered in Greek, Latin, English, German, French, Italian, Spanish, History, Political Science, Philosophy, Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry and Biology, and graduate and elective courses in Sanskrit and Indo-European Philology, Old French, Gothic, Teutonic Philology, Old Norse, Old High German, Middle High German, Old Saxon, Anglo-Saxon, Celtic and Slavonic Languages, Hebrew, Aramaic, Assyrian, Biblical Literature, Education, History of Art, Experimental Psychology, Physical Chemistry, Geology, Mineralogy, Palæontology, and Physiological Chemistry. The laboratories are well equipped with apparatus. The college library contains an excellent working collection of forty-one thousand volumes, all purchased within the last nineteen years; three hundred and twenty-five periodicals and reviews are taken by the library.

The college grounds cover fifty acres and include tennis courts, basket ball fields, and a large athletic field and skating pond. The gymnasium, fitted with Dr. Sargent's complete apparatus and open to the students at all times, contains a swimming tank seventy feet in length. Two trained instructors teach gymnastic work and swimming, and all kinds of out-of-door sports are taught by a director of athletics, who is an English woman. Free medical advice is given the students by a woman physician in active practice in Philadelphia.

Graduates of colleges of good standing are admitted to the graduate school without examination. All undergraduates must pass the entrance examinations of Bryn Mawr College, or the examinations of the College Entrance Examination Board. Eight competitive scholarships, four of the value of three hundred dollars, and four of the value of two hundred dollars, are awarded annually to the eight candidates passing the best entrance examinations.

One scholarship of the value of eight hundred dollars, or two hundred dollars a year, renewable for four years, is awarded each year to the member of the Society of Friends needing assistance passing the best entrance examination. Three graduate scholarships of four hundred dollars are awarded each year to the best women graduates of Earlham, Penn and Guilford Colleges, and two additional graduate scholarships of the value of two hundred dollars each are open for competition to graduate students who are members of the Society of Friends and need financial assistance. These scholarships were established by the Trustees in accordance with the desire of the Founder of the college to promote the advanced education of women in the Society of Friends.

There are also open each year for competition to all members of the graduate school eleven resident fellowships of the value of five hundred and twenty-five dollars each, two European traveling fellowships of the value of five hundred dollars each, and eight resident graduate scholarships of the value of two hundred dollars each.

The college campus contains the following buildings which have been erected at the total cost of over one million dollars: Taylor Hall, for lectures and administration; Dalton Hall, for scientific work; a Gymnasium; six large halls of residence, each accommodating about seventy students; two large apartment houses for the faculty, each containing twenty suites; seven professors' houses; an infirmary; and a Library and lecture building in process of erection.

Applications for the program of studies, containing plans of the academic buildings and halls of residence; and all enquiries may be addressed to the Secretary's Office, Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Penna.
